IN the following Translation, the simple character of the Æschylean Dialogues has generally enabled me to render them without any material deviation from the construction and idioms of the original Greek. But in the Choruses, where the sense is often more obscure, the transitions more rapid, and the repetitions more frequent,—repetitions, it should be remembered, which the musical accompaniment reconciled to the ears of an Athenian audience,—I have been compelled to allow myself a greater latitude; satisfied if I could express the general scope and bearing of a passage, which the rules of our lyrical metres made it impossible for me to translate word for word.

The Greek Text adopted in this Edition is based upon that of Wellauer, which may be said, in general terms, to represent that of the best Manuscripts. But in correcting the Text, and in the Notes, I have freely taken advantage of the suggestions of Hermann, Paley, Linwood, and the other Commentators who have preceded me. A list of the deviations from Wellauer's Edition, will be found preceding the Greek Text.

PRIESTESS.

FIRST of the Deities, in this my prayer
I worship Earth, the mother-prophetess :
Dread Themis next, who took by right of birth
Her mother's office (as tradition saith) ;
Transferr'd it then to Phœbe ; she in turn
Gave it her grandson Phœbus, with the name
From her derived, a birthday offering.
So Phœbus left his native Delian crags,
Sped o'er the seas, and touch'd at Pallas' town ;
Whose citizens to do him reverence
Sent mighty pioneers, Hephæstus' sons,
Made the hills low, the stony places plain,
Until he reach'd Parnassus' fruitful vale.
Delphus the prince bade welcome to the God,
And all the people paid him vassalage.
Now therefore Phœbus, delegate inspired
By Zeus his father, fourth upon the throne Sits, and interprets all his father's will.
Next Pallas comes ; and then the nymphs that dwell

(Greek text, v. 1 22)

Within the haunted grot of Corycum,
 The haunted home of nymphs and nightingales,
 Which Bacchus rules by conquest, since he wove
 Meshes of death to snare its rebel king :
 The founts of Pleistus, that Poseidon loves ;
 And last I worship Zeus, the lord of all.—
 This done, I take my place upon the throne
 Sacred to Prophecy ; and pray the gods
 To bless my entrance, as they ever bless it.
 Draw near who may ; Greeks first, then strangers all,
 And let the God to each assign his rank
 By lot determined : for I may not yield
 Answers at random, but as He suggests.

[Exit, and re-enters in extreme agitation.]

O horrible to tell ! O monstrous sight !
 Back from the shrine I reel, with terror crazed,
 Weak as an infant, clutching at support,
 Such fears have paralysed these aged limbs.

[Pauses.]

It was an awful vision. Thus it fell :
 Advancing to the tripod, lo ! I see
 A man accurst, upon the central stone
 Kneeling in suppliant posture : on his hands
 Were stains of blood, and in his right a sword,
 And in his left an olive's topmost spray,
 Deck'd with a fillet of white glistening wool.
 Thus far I mark'd, and can distinctly speak.
 In front of him, ye gods ! a fearful troop
 Of sleeping beldames, perch'd upon the benches :
 Not women they, but Gorgons—Gorgons ? No—
 Far uglier than Gorgons—I have seen
 Harpies in pictures, dragging off a feast,
 And such are these—harpies without their wings,
 Of hideous aspect, swart, unnatural.

Loudly they snore, and may not be approach'd,
 So poisonous their breath; while from their eyes
 Issues a dripping tide of filthy rheum:
 And then their dress—it was not fit to wear,
 Nor in God's temple, nor in haunts of men.
 So foul a company I never knew;
 And whatsoever country rear'd a brood
 So pestilent, shall one day rue its pains.
 I can no more—let great Apollo heed
 The sequel;—wisest of physicians he,
 The Lord of prophets, and of miracles.—
 Cleanser of temples! purify thine own.—

[Exit PRIESTESS.]

SCENE II.—Interior of the Temple—The FURIES are discovered asleep on the seats: ORESTES on the Omphalus: APOLLO near him; and HERMES in the background.

APOLLO.

Unhappy youth! I will not give thee up:
 True to thy cause, a watchful sentinel,
 Though far away, I'll still be near to thee,
 And still do battle with thine enemies.
 Look at these rabid creatures: mark how sleep
 Hath overcast their senses, where they lie
 A band of loathly and detested hags,
 Ancient virginities, with whom nor god
 Nor man nor beast will ever deign to mate:
 For evil were they born, and in the womb
 Of earth they dwell, 'mid horrid Stygian caves,
 Hated by mortals, damn'd by gods above.
 Yet though they sleep, betake thee swift to flight,
 And courage! thou hast many a weary mile

Of ground to tread in thy lone pilgrimage,
 While they from continent to continent
 Shall urge thee forward, and from sea to sea,
 Across the wave-bound cities of the deep.
 Faint not in spirit, brooding o'er the toil ;
 But hie thee straight to Pallas' citadel,
 And clasp her ancient image in thine arms :
 There in good time, so thou despairest not,
 I'll get thee judges and an advocate,
 And find the means of thy deliverance.
 'Twas my advice that wrought thy mother's death ;
 And I will shield thee from the punishment.

ORESTES.

Divine Apollo, thou dost know the right ;
 And since thou know'st it, deal aright with me ;
 And oh ! be kind, as thou art powerful.

APOLLO.

Remember ! let not fear thy spirits quell.
 Hermes, my brother, be it thine to watch, [to HERMES.
 And be, as thou art call'd, the God of guidance,
 Tending my suppliant : holy privilege,
 To guard the weak, that Zeus hath granted thee,
 And made thee bringer of good speed to men.

[Exit ORESTES, conducted by HERMES.

GHOST.

Sleep on there, ho ! and pray what need of sleepers ?
 So is it ever with you—woe is me !
 I, that did murder, wander unanneal'd ;
 Departed spirits shun me like a plague,
 Or else with foul reproaches torture me :
 But no avenging deity is wroth
 On my behalf, though I was foully slain.

You, too, neglect me, and betray my cause.
 Your hearts, I trow, can see this bleeding breast :
 Though slumber hath seal'd up the natural eyesight,
 It brighteneth the vision of the mind,
 And darkness maketh plain what daylight veils.
 Ungrateful hags ! full many a time and oft
 Ye lapp'd your fill from my rich offerings,
 When at the hour of midnight I stole forth
 To heap my gifts upon your glowing altars,
 And feed you with the incense that ye love.
 O base return ! O vile forgetfulness !
 Look where the murderer, laughing you to scorn,
 Bursts from the bonds your hands have knit for him,
 As bounds the hart from out the hunter's snare.
 Hear it, ye Furies ! hear me plead my cause :
 I make appeal to your eternal laws :
 Oh ! let not this an idle vision seem :
 'Tis Clytemnestra calls you in a dream.

[The FURIES mutter in sleep.]

GHOST.

What ! do ye mutter ? Up, and to the chase :
He has found patrons and a resting-place.

[The FURIES mutter.]

GHOST.

Too much you sleep, and take no thought for me :
 The slain is punish'd, but the slayer free.

[The FURIES groan.]

GHOST.

Dost groan ? dost slumber ? Rise, and do thy will :
 Thou art not forward, save in working ill.

[The FURIES groan.]

GHOST.

When sleep and toil conspire to close the eyes,
 Sapp'd of her might the fell she-dragon lies.

[The FURIES mutter loudly, as if waking: the LEADER calls out, "Take heed," and the CHORUS, "Seize him," several times in rapid succession, giving tongue as hounds.]

GHOST.

What, do ye yelp and whine? Out, noisy pack:
 Be like stanch bloodhounds, follow up the track.
 Let my sharp taunts sink deep into your breast;
 Up, and be doing! Is't a time for rest?
 Blow forth the deadly venom of your breath,
 Waste him with fire and smoke and lingering death.

[Exit GHOST.]

LEADER OF THE CHORUS [awaking].

Why, how now, sluggard! Sleeping at your post?
 Awake, arise—our labours else were lost.

[She wakes the FURY next to her, she the next, and so on, in succession, until they all start up distractedly.]

CHORUS.

Powers of vengeance! we're undone;
 Whither, whither hath he run?
 Much I've suffer'd, but in vain;
 Deep, unutterable pain:—
 We, the wakeful, shall be blamed,
 We shall be for ever shamed.
 From the nets the quarry's gone,
 We were sleeping every one.

Stole away! Stole away!

Sisters, we have miss'd the prey.

[Seeing APOLLO.]

Ha, son of Zeus, 'tis thou hast been the thief!

'Tis thou hast snatch'd the victim from mine eyes!

What, shall a God to Murder bring relief,

And clasp a bloody hand in friendly guise?

Woe, when the stripling tyrant of an hour
 Can spurn the adamantine laws of Time ;
 When licensed felons mock the Furies' power,
 And Purity can stoop to shelter Crime !

A vision hover'd near me where I lay,
 Yea, lash'd me to the soul with scourges keen :
 Still, still I see it, through the glare of day,
 A gory bosom, and a spectral queen.

Behold ! the centre of a glorious fane
 Is streak'd throughout with dripping goutts of blood ;
 On hallow'd ground an everlasting stain
 Shall mark the spot where foul Pollution stood.

Degenerate God ! for this did Heav'n's command
 Yield thee the keys of this time-honour'd pile,
 That thou with Guilt shouldst follow hand-in-hand,
 And Prophecy's pure seat with blood defile ?

Vain are thine arts, and sure is Fate's decree :
 Vainly thou part'st the culprit from his doom :
 We dog his steps o'er earth and air and sea,
 And persecute his soul beyond the tomb.

APOLLO.

Aroint ye, beldames ! Hence, accursed crew !
 Relieve this temple of your noisome presence !
 Lest from my golden bowstring I shoot forth
 A hissing shaft, and rive your sooty hides,
 So that for pain you vomit up the food,
 The hateful food, that swells your gluttred maws.
 It is not meet that you approach these walls ;
 Go, where the Exècutors of judgment stalk,

Where heads are sever'd, eyes from out their sockets
 Dug piecemeal, limbs disjointed on the rack ;
 Where men are pounded down to Hell with stones ;
 Where poor impalèd wretches gasp for death
 Shrieking with agony. Ha ! do ye mark
 The horrid banquet, which your company
 Doth gloat and revel in ? a taste that grows
 I' th' outward semblance of your hungry visage.
 Seek for your home the grisly lion's den ;
 Batten with him on bones, lick dripping flesh,
 And tarry not to vex this holy shrine.
 Go feed, vile flock, without a shepherd's care,
 Abhor'd alike by all the Powers of Air.

CHORUS.

Apollo, thou hast said—now listen : Thou,
 Thou art the single cause of all this mischief ;
 Not an accomplice, but the chief in guilt.

APOLLO.

Aye and indeed ? nay, come we to the proof.

CHORUS.

Your oracles induced a mother's death.

APOLLO.

My oracles avenged a father's death.

CHORUS.

Next, you gave refuge to the murderer.

APOLLO.

Yea, in this temple did I harbour him.

CHORUS.

Besides, you have reviled our holy office.

APOLLO.

No : rather your profane intrusion here.

CHORUS.

And yet in this consists our privilege.

APOLLO.

What privilege? ye boast without your warrant.

CHORUS.

We were ordain'd to punish matricides.

APOLLO.

What, if the woman slain hath kill'd her husband?

CHORUS.

Aye: for a husband's is not kindred blood.

APOLLO.

O monstrous reasoning, that turns to scorn
 The nuptial pledges of Imperial Zeus,
 And makes a cipher of the Queen of Love,
 To whom all human passions minister:—
 Know that the marriage contract, rightly kept
 With full observance, knits a stricter bond
 Than any other form of earthly duty.
 Wherefore, if murder of a wedded lord
 Be counted blameless, and your anger sleeps,
 By your own laws I claim Orestes' quittance:
 Or else what justice, if you scourge the one,
 And let the other triumph unrebuked?
 I'll meet you on this question by-and-by:
 Immortal Pallas shall the issue try.

CHORUS.

Think not that I will e'er the chase forego.

APOLLO.

Chase on: heap toil on toil, add woe to woe.

CHORUS.

What, do you scoff, and flout my sovereign sway?

APOLLO.

Were I thus king'd, I would not reign a day.

CHORUS.

Nay, without this, thou'rt mighty in the skies.—
 Now to my task: an injured spectre cries:—

THE FURIES.

Come, ye Furies, far and wide
We must chase the Matricide ;
Over mountain, over lea,
Over ocean, follow me.

APOLLO.

Follow one, and follow all—
Open to the suppliant's call
Are mine ears, and swift to aid,—
Shall the friendless be betray'd ?
Then a clinging curse would be
On the perjured Deity.

[Exeunt.]

(v. 222—225.)

END OF THE FIRST ACT.

ACT II.

Athens—the Temple of Pallas.

[A considerable interval of time is supposed to have elapsed between the foregoing and following parts of the Drama.]

SCENE I.

Enter ORESTES.

ORESTES.

By Phœbus' order, Pallas, I am here :
Vouchsafe kind welcome to the homicide,
No longer unredeem'd, nor black with guilt,
Nor spreading quick infection by the touch ;
By intercourse with men, my crime hath lost
The keenness of its edge, and is effaced.
Yet not the less I've traversed land and sea
Led by the dictates of the Prophet-Lord,
Guiding my steps to reach this happy city,
Mine arms to clasp thine image.—Here I stand,
And trust the sequel of my fate to thee.

[He embraces the image of the Goddess.]

Enter CHORUS.

LEADER.

Soho :—we've open'd on his trail anew :

Blood, blood, I smell 't :—follow the voiceless clew.
 As hounds a wounded roebuck in a wood,
 So hunt we out our prey by scent of blood.

Pants my bosom with fatigue :
 Over many a weary league
 Have I sped with wingless motion,
 Like a ship that skims the ocean :
 For hither hath the victim flown,
 And somewhere here is crouching down.
 I smell the blood of mortal man.

Search and look

In every nook,

Peep and pry and closely scan
 Every place, about, around,
 In the air and underground,
 Till the Matricide be found.

[Seeing ORESTES.]

See! to Pallas' holy fane
 Hath he brought his evil deeds :
 Clasps her image, but in vain :
 Vainly for a trial pleads.

Trial or penance shall he none ;
 Unabsolved shall murderers kneel :—
 Wounds that with the lifeblood run,
 Art of man can never heal.

Blood for blood—my crooked lip
 Shall from thy fast-flowing veins
 Drops of gory nectar sip :
 Vengeance for a mother's pains.

Slowly, slowly, waste away,
 Gnaw'd by my relentless fangs ;

Quit the blessed light of day,
Doom'd to everlasting pangs.

Whoso doeth wilful sin,
Sacriligious act or word,
Wrongeth guest, or friend, or kin,
Lo! above him hangs the sword.

Under earth grim judges sit,
Searchers of the inmost soul :
Lightest thought of man is writ
Deep in their recording scroll.

ORESTES.

Taught in the school of stern adversity,
I know, methinks, each purifying rite ;
Where it is best to speak, and where keep silence.
Wherefore, in this extremity, the counsel
Of a wise teacher prompteth me to speak :
For sleeps the blood, and wanes from off my hand ;
Its dark pollution hath been wash'd away.—
I stood before the altar, while the God
Fulfill'd the sacrifice of slaughter'd swine ;
The blood of victims innocently shed
Absorb'd the guilty stain—and I am free.
'Twere long to tell how many mortal hands
I since have press'd in harmless intercourse ;
For Sin grows old, and Time can purge the soul.
Now with pure lips to Pallas can I pray,
Queen of this land, to come and succour me ;
So without help of battle she shall gain
Myself, my people, and the Argive race
To be her trusty and deserved allies.
Now, whether at her home in Libyan wilds,

Watching the eddies of her native brook,
 She plants her foot erect, in act to march,
 Or, sitting, veils it o'er with drapery ;
 Or, having view'd the broad Phlegræan plains,
 Like a brave leader marshalling the van,
 Cries, Pallas to the rescue! may she come :—
 Her ears, I wot, can hear my voice afar :—
 Oh may she come, and bring deliverance.

CHORUS.

Neither Apollo, nor the mighty Pallas
 Will save thee from perdition : thou shalt lie
 Deep in Hell's prison-house, a joyless ghost,
 A bloodless bait of devils, and a shadow.
 What, art too proud to answer? dost defy
 My vengeful threats, thou who wert born and rear'd
 A scapegoat for my altar? Aye, and quick,
 Not sacrificed, I'll tear thy quivering limbs :
 Now hear the spell that binds thy soul to me.

LEADER. [Recitative.]

Come, let us weave the dance—and, sisters, choose
 The dark outpourings of a baleful muse :
 So by our strains shall sceptic mortals know
 That Retribution follows Crime below.
 He who hath walk'd in Virtue's quiet ways,
 In peace shall live, in peace shall end his days ;
 But if a wretch with murder dyes his hand,
 Close at his heels the fierce Avengers stand.

CHORUS.

Mother Night, from whom I spring,
 A curse to every guilty thing
 On the earth or in the grave,
 Hear me, Mother ! hear, and save.

Justice sleepeth, when a God
 Snatches from my hand the rod,
 Breaks the bond my spells have tied,
 Steals from me the Matricide !

Against the Devoted
 We mutter a spell,
 Shall bar him from heaven,
 Shall bind him to hell :
 We lash him to frenzy
 By dissonant hymns,
 And harrow his spirit,
 And wither his limbs ;
 And blight him, and scorch him
 With soul-killing fires,
 Till the last ray of life
 In the socket expires.

From the primal laws of Fate
 Comes my office and estate :
 Strife, that channels kindred blood,
 And violated brotherhood,
 Unavenged shall never be,
 While the trust is held by me :
 I haunt the path of the guilty one
 Every where beneath the sun
 Till his race of life be run ;
 When his eyelids close in death,
 Penal torture followeth ;
 Passeth not with passing breath.

Against the Devoted
 We mutter a spell,
 Shall bar him from heaven,

Shall bind him to hell ;
 We lash him to frenzy
 By dissonant hymns,
 And harrow his spirit,
 And wither his limbs ;
 And blight him, and scorch him
 With soul-killing fires,
 Till the last ray of life
 In the socket expires.

When first we arose from the womb of Night,
 Our lot was portion'd by fix'd birthright :
 We reign unenvied and alone ;
 Nor lives the God that would care to own
 A place at our revels, a seat on our throne.
 We wear not robes of snowy sheen,
 But the shadowy cloak of the sable Queen ;
 The nectar-feasts we may not share ;
 We fix'd our habitation there,
 Where Malice prowls, and hungry Lust,
 Where Strife and Murder find a home ;
 But when the fulness of time is come,
 We strike, and crumble them to dust.

Never will I from my duty swerve :
 Be it a care to the Lords I serve
 That deprecating cries and tears
 Be check'd before they reach mine ears :
 For Zeus expels our loathèd rites
 Far from the ken of his satellites,
 And holds his majesty too high
 To mingle words with such as I.
 Yet wary must the victim be
 That doubles from the fatal snare,

When I leap like a torrent through the air
With headlong speed and fiendish glee,
And fasten on the fainting prey,
And hale him to his doom away.

All human pomp, all high renown,
Must to a shadow dwindle down,
When we, the black-cow'd sisters, meet,
And circle round the child of Sin,
Nearer and nearer closing in,
With clamour wild and weird-like feet :
Torture and madness are then his lot,
But he stands still, and knows it not,
So dark a mist his vision veils ;
And scandal's softly whisper'd tales
Enfold his kindred like a pall ;
For one man's guilt attaints them all.

Ever watchful, swift to wrath,
Dwelling in our sunless bowers,
We must tread a hated path,
Closed to other feet than ours.

We judge the quick, we judge the dead ;
Mortals ! who absolved would be,
Worship with a holy dread
Our time-honour'd ministry.

(v. 346—374.)

SCENE II.

Enter PALLAS.

PALLAS.

From lone Sigeum and Scamander's banks
 I heard, methought, a supplicating cry :
 Whilst eager to forestal usurping claims
 I took possession of the conquer'd shore,
 Which at the fall of Troy, the warrior-kings
 Gave as my portion of the hard-won spoil
 By seisure in fee-simple : I in turn Convey it as a gift to Theseus' heirs.
 Thence have I plied my never-wearied feet,
 Oar'd by this flapping shield in lieu of wings :
 No other car, no other steeds have I.
 Now when I view these settlers in the land,
 I fear them not, but marvel whence they came,
 And fain would ask, what this assemblage means ?
 Who is the Man that kneels before mine image,
 Who these strange Beings, different in shape
 From Gods above, and denizens of earth ?
 No worse of them I'll say : it is not meet
 To slander others, though oneself be pure.

CHORUS.

Daughter of Zeus, concisely will I speak :
 We are the children of eternal Night,
 Called "Aræ" in our subterrene abodes.

PALLAS.

I know your race, and whence the name's derived.

CHORUS.

Then you shall briefly learn our office too.

PALLAS.

Gladly I'd learn it—be it yours to tell.

CHORUS.

We chase the man that spills his fellow's blood.

PALLAS.

Good:—and what limit to your victim's flight?

CHORUS.

None, save where joy is nowise entertain'd.

PALLAS.

And is it thus you persecute this stranger?

CHORUS.

Aye, even thus: because he slew his mother.

PALLAS.

Urged by no fears, no impulse from without?

CHORUS.

What impulse can excuse a deed so foul?

PALLAS.

Two parties are at issue—one hath spoken.

CHORUS.

He neither will accept, nor tender oath.

PALLAS.

You love the name, but not the works of Justice.

CHORUS.

How so? instruct me, an' your wisdom likes.

PALLAS.

Oaths cannot change the merits of a cause.

CHORUS.

Well—hear the evidence, and judge yourself.

PALLAS.

To me, then, you refer this arbitration?

CHORUS.

Aye; for we hold you worthy of the office,

And coming from a worthy parentage.

PALLAS [to ORESTES].

What will you answer, Stranger, to their charge?
 Tell me your lineage and your country first,
 Relate the chance that brought you hither-ward,
 Then quit yourself of this imputed guilt;
 If trusting to the justice of your cause
 You fly for refuge to my altar-seat
 Ixion-wise, a noble suppliant:—
 To each of these demands make clear reply.

ORESTES.

From thy last words, Athene, I'll begin,
 And clear myself of one momentous charge.
 The curse of blood no longer clings to me;
 Nor doth mine hand infect thine image now:
 Be this the proof:—by immemorial law
 The murderer's lips are seal'd, until such time
 As by the blood of slaughter'd swine his hands
 Are purged from sin; this done, he is absolved.
 These rites have I perform'd,—the sacrifice,
 The lustral water, and the intercourse
 With human dwellings—all hath been observed:
 Nor doth this matter still affect the case.
 My name and lineage are quickly told.
 I am an Argive; and thou know'st my sire,
 The captain of the fleet, great Agamemnon,
 Whom thou didst aid to sack the walls of 'Troy.
 When to his native city he return'd,
 Basely he perish'd:—my black-hearted mother
 Snared him to death in many-twisted toils;
 Witness the fatal chamber, and the bath.
 I was an exile then: at my return
 I stabb'd my mother—I admit the fact—
 In retribution for a father's blood.
 The guilt of this, if guilt indeed there be,

Apollo shares : his oracles foretold
 That horrid pangs should rack my craven soul,
 Unless I slew the slayers.—I have done :
 On thy decision doth the issue hang ;
 In thy decision I will acquiesce.

PALLAS.

The matter is too great for mortal judge ;
 And hardly doth my Godhead warrant me
 In sitting to adjudicate a suit
 Of murder, that from fierce resentment springs.
 Yet, since thou comest absolute in all
 The needful rites of expiation,
 I may not overlook thy suppliant prayer,
 But bid thee welcome to this friendly city.
 For these—they have an awful duty too :
 And should my verdict baffle their revenge,
 The venom of a dark unsated spirit
 Falls on the ground, and festers there for aye,
 A noisome and intolerable plague.
 Hence my dilemma :—go they, or remain,
 Victors or vanquish'd, each alternative
 Is fraught with much embarrassment to me.
 Yet since the matter hath devolved on us,
 A jury bound by oath will I empanel,
 And frame an everlasting ordinance.

[To the FURIES.]

Summon your witnesses, adduce the proofs,
 True evidence that simplifies the case ;
 And I will meet you, having chosen first
 The worthiest of my people, who shall swear
 To judge the issue well and righteously.

[Exit PALLAS.]

CHORUS.

Now faction turns to nought the ancient laws :

Now foul is fair—and Murder wins the cause.
 Clear'd is the path to each felonious deed ;
 Children shall lightly stab, and parents bleed.
 No more the vengeful Sisterhood maintain
 A watch on crime : appeal to us is vain ;
 Henceforth, no guilt so darkly dyed shall be,
 But it will meet immunity from me.
 He that relates his neighbours' ills, shall know
 Himself involved in deeper gulfs of woe :
 Certain the pain, uncertain the relief :
 Care shall soothe Care, and Sorrow comfort Grief.

Fathers, by your sons betray'd,
 Mothers, by your offspring slain,
 Call no more on us for aid
 With a solemn, plaintive strain :
 " Oh, where is Justice ? where the Furies' throne ?"
 Justice is exiled, and her temple gone.

Well for him whose earthly lust
 Limits, conscience-set, restrain ;
 Well for him who gleans with trust
 Wisdom out of suffer'd pain :
 But how shall they, who steel their hearts from fear,
 The sacred majesty of Law revere ?

Not in extremes can truth exist :
 Approved by me hath never been
 The Outlaw, nor the Formalist :
 But God hath bless'd the golden mean.

Pride is the first-born child of Sin ;
 But Piety, and Self-control,
 A heart well disciplined within,
 Lead all men to the wish'd-for goal.

Thou that aright wouldst guide thy feet,
Oh, worship Justice ; never spurn,
With godless scorn, her altar-seat ;
For Vengeance cometh in its turn,

And certain doom the sinner waits :
Honour thy parents, and protect
The stranger that is in thy gates :
Be watchful, wise, and circumspect.

Live virtuously without constraint ;
Be just without the hope of meed :
Come woe, thy spirit shall not faint ;
Come weal, thou shalt be blest indeed.

The wicked for awhile may glide
Athwart the quiet waves—anon
The storm-blast roaring far and wide
Whelms his frail bark—and it is gone :

Then battling with the crested flood
He calls on Gods that will not save :—
Heaven laughs to see th' impetuous blood
Grow chill beneath the stifling wave ;

And all the wealth, by which his soul
To hedge herself made vain endeavour,
Is wreck'd on Justice' hidden shoal,
And, unregretted, sinks for ever.

(v. 510—535.)

END OF THE SECOND ACT.

ACT III.

SCENE I.

Enter PALLAS (conducting the TWELVE AREOPAGITES, who take their seats), ORESTES, and CHORUS.

PALLAS.

MAKE proclamation, herald, and convene
The people. Let the loud Tyrrhenian trumpet,
Fill'd with the breath of man, cleave the wide air,
And speak shrill treble to the citizens.
While that this Court is sitting, it is best
To keep a solemn silence, and receive
My ordinance : for thus the general state
Shall reap a harvest of eternal good,
And, specially, the long-contending claims
Of these our litigants be judged aright.

[Trumpet sounds.

To them enter APOLLO.

CHORUS.

My lord Apollo, pr'ythee rule thine own.
Resolve the Court what makes your presence here.

APOLLO.

First, I am here as witness ; (the defendant

Was suppliant in my temple, and 'twas I
That purified him from the stains of blood;)
And then as advocate, I come prepared
To justify the murder of his mother :
Wherefore, let some one introduce the suit,
To whom this office rightly appertains.

PALLAS.

I introduce the suit; [to the FURIES] it rests with you,
The plaintiffs, to speak first, and state the facts
From their commencement, to the jury here.

CHORUS.

Though we are many, we will speak as one :
(To ORESTES) Do you reply alternate word for word.
First, did you slay your mother—aye or no ?

ORESTES.

I slew her : I will not deny the fact.

CHORUS.

Then in the wrestling-bout one fall is mine.

ORESTES.

Nay, crow not thus, until your foe is floor'd.

CHORUS.

Natheless you own that you did murder her.

ORESTES.

Yea, sword in hand, I pierced her naked throat.

CHORUS.

Whose instigation prick'd you—whose advice ?

ORESTES.

Apollo's oracle : himself is witness.

CHORUS.

What! did the prophet sanction matricide ?

ORESTES.

Aye, and I still repine not at the chance.

CHORUS.

But if condemn'd, you'll change your note anon.

ORESTES.

I have no fears. My father's spirit aids me.

CHORUS.

Wretch! trust you to the Dead, a mother kill'd?

ORESTES.

Two crimes of hers gave colour to the deed.

CHORUS.

How so? explain, and let the jury hear.

ORESTES.

She slew a man—that man my father.—

CHORUS.

—Death

Absolves her then;—you live for punishment.

ORESTES.

Why did you not pursue her when alive?

CHORUS.

It was not kindred blood your mother shed.

ORESTES.

And was she then of kindred blood to me?

CHORUS.

Did she not bear thee, murd'rer, in her womb?

Wouldst thou disown such dear relationship?

ORESTES.

Stand forth, Apollo, and expound the law

That quits my soul of homicidal guilt.

The fact brooks no denial: 'tis confest;

But whether I was justified or no,

This question must your wisdom now resolve.

APOLLO.

Grave Senators of Athens, mighty Court,

I come to advocate this cause aright;

And as a Soothsayer, I may not lie.

Know that in all my utter'd oracles

Whate'er the subject, be it man or state,

I but interpret the commands of Zeus :
 An argument of force ; which draws you on
 To further Zeus's schemes, whose sovereign will
 Should be the goal and anchor of your faith.

CHORUS.

Zeus, you aver, commanded you to tell
 Orestes this : t' avenge his murder'd sire,
 And in his vengeance, slight a mother's claims ?

APOLLO.

Aye, truly :—mark how wide the difference is.
 A noble prince, in whom the gift of heav'n
 Vested his birthright of authority,
 Dies by a woman's hand—not slain in war
 By arrows of some puissant Amazon ;
 Far baser was his fate, as you shall hear,
 Pallas, and ye, the judges of this cause.
 Him, coming homeward from his long campaign,
 Laden with honour, the false Queen received
 With open arms and honey'd phrase of love :
 But as he bathed his royal limbs, she threw
 A broider'd robe athwart the vessel's length
 From end to end, and smote her helpless lord
 Ensnared within the spangled drapery.
 Thus have I told you how the hero fell,
 The all-revered, the leader of an host :
 And thus I paint his murderess, to excite
 Meet indignation in the judges' breasts.

CHORUS.

Zeus, as you say, takes part with injured sires :
 But Zeus hath chain'd his sire, the aged Cronus.
 How will you solve the inconsistency ?
 [To the JURY] Give your attention, citizens, to this.

APOLLO.

Ye loathly monsters, whom the Gods abhor,

Fetters, we know, are med'cinable ills,
 For with their loosing, comes the remedy :
 But when the dust hath suck'd the blood of man,
 No healing charm can bring him back to life :
 Not the great lord of Heav'n, who in a breath
 Makes and unmakes all other things at will,
 Hath found a spell to reinstate the dead.

CHORUS.

Say that you gain this verdict—mark what fruits,
 What bitter fruits from his acquittal grow.
 How shall Orestes here, his mother slain,
 Remain at Argos in his father's house ?
 How claim admittance to the public altars,
 Or lustral water that his tribesmen use ?

APOLLO.

This will I tell, and prove by argument.—
 The mother cannot be, in procreation,
 The generative agent ; she receives
 And holds the foetus in her passive womb.
 The male begets ; the female entertains
 As 'twere a guest, and nurtures into life
 The formless germ, unless God cripple it.
 In proof whereof—a father may produce
 Offspring alone, without the mother's aid :
 Witness the daughter of Olympian Zeus,
 Not foster'd in the darkness of a womb,
 But born in full maturity, a scion
 Such as no other parent-stock might rear.—
 Thrice honour'd Pallas, I in all things else
 Strive to exalt your citizens' renown,
 And to this end I bade Orestes sit
 As suppliant in your temple ; to secure
 His well-earn'd gratitude to you and yours,
 And knit a compact of alliance, strong

To pledge the generations yet unborn,
Athenians and Argives, for all time.

PALLAS.

Enough of speaking. Let the Jury now
Record their votes with all sincerity.

CHORUS.

Our ammunition in the war of words
Is spent ; and I to hear the issue wait.

PALLAS.

How shall I judge, and yet not anger you ?

CHORUS [to the JURY].

Strangers, ye know the facts : be mindful of
The oaths ye took, and vote accordingly.

PALLAS.

Burghers of Athens, ye who first decide
A suit of bloodshed, hear my ordinance ;
And let the people, while this city stands,
Regard you as an everlasting court.
This hill of Ares and Acropolis
The Amazons entrench'd, and capp'd with towers,
What time they warr'd against the reigning king
Theseus, to fight their ancient quarrel out :
And here they sacrificed to Ares, whence
This AREOPAGUS derives its name.
Religion here, and inborn loyalty
Shall interpose a barrier, night and day,
Betwixt my citizens and wrongful deeds ;
Except they tamper with their country's laws,
Should muddy streams defile the crystal well,
The traveller hath not wherewithal to drink.
Let not despotic power nor anarchy
O'ercrow your government. Embrace the mean :
Nor banish all religion from the State.
Who that is not religious can be just ?

Cleave to religion, and you shall possess
 A bulwark of the land, stronger than those
 That fence the Scythian horde, or Pelops' sons.
 This Court I stablish, incorruptible,
 Severe, majestic, at the hour of night
 Awake to guard the sleeping citizens.—
 Thus have I left to your posterity
 My best advice.—Arise, ye judges, take
 Each man his ballot, and decide the suit
 With due remembrance of your plighted oaths.

[The FIRST AREOPAGITE votes.]

CHORUS [to the JURY.]

Be ruled by me ; nor wilfully defy
 The Powers that claim your hospitality.

[The SECOND votes.]

APOLLO.

Be ruled by me ; nor impiously withstand
 My oracles, and Zeus's high command.

[The THIRD votes.]

CHORUS.

Tush, you have meddled with a murd'rous deed :
 Henceforth your prophet-lips shall cleansing need.

[The FOURTH votes.]

APOLLO.

What ! did great Zeus his majesty impair
 Because he listened to Ixion's prayer ?

[The FIFTH votes.]

CHORUS.

'Tis well :—disgrace me, and dismiss me hence—
 I'll haunt your country like a pestilence.

[The SIXTH votes.]

APOLLO.

The Gods, both old and young, abhor your name ;
 Mine, mine shall be the triumph—yours the shame.

[The SEVENTH votes.]

(v. 670—692.)

CHORUS.

Lured by your arts, the Fates unwitting gave
To Pheres' son exemption from the grave.

[The EIGHTH votes.]

APOLLO.

Should not a God, if worshipp'd well, bestow
Aid on his votary in the hour of woe?

[The NINTH votes.]

CHORUS.

You steep'd our souls in wine, and turn'd to scorn
Our rights, that with the birth of Time were born.

[The TENTH votes.]

APOLLO.

Cast in this suit, you presently shall spit
Poison, that injures not your foes a whit.

[The ELEVENTH votes.]

CHORUS.

Scoff as you list; I wait to hear the end:
Now to this state shall I be foe or friend.

[The TWELFTH AREOPAGITE votes.]

PALLAS.

It falls on me to give my vote the last,
And I record it in Orestes' favour.
My birth was motherless, and I defer
In all things, saving wedlock, to the male;
And range me wholly on the Father's side:—
Nor do I much regard the Woman's fate
Who slew her lord, the head of all her house.
Wherefore, should equal votes appear for each,
Orestes conquers.—Empty out the urns,
Whoso hath been appointed to this office.

ORESTES.

Oh! tell me, Phœbus, what shall be the end?

CHORUS.

Oh, Night! dark-visaged mother, seest thou this?

ORESTES.

Now have I reach'd the goal of life or death.

CHORUS.

Shall I be ruin'd, or be worshipp'd still?

[The ballots are turned out of the urn and counted.]

APOLLO.

Count out the suffrages aright, my friends;

See that ye carefully distinguish them.

CHORUS.

In lack of care lies mischief; oft ere now

A single vote hath made or marr'd a house.

PALLAS.

Verdict—ACQUITTAL from the charge of murder;

For equal are the votes on either side.

[She gives her casting vote in favour of ORESTES.]

ORESTES.

Oh, Pallas! oh, preserver of my house!

A wretched outcast from his fatherland

Hast thou restored. Henceforth among the Greeks

In conversation, men shall say of me,

“ He is once more an Argive, and he dwells

Upon his patrimony, by the help

Of Pallas, and of Phœbus, and of him

The mighty Third, who sets his seat on all,

Zeus Soter:” he respects my murder'd sire,

He saves me from my mother's advocates.

Now will I turn me homeward, having first

Sworn a great oath to these your citizens,

That from this day, through all succeeding time,

No monarch that bears rule in Argolis

Shall bring against you his embattled host.

For we ourselves, though lying in the tomb,

Should any prince transgress this oath of mine,
 Will cross his path with terrible portents,
 And cause him to repent the perjury.
 But if they keep my pledges, and maintain
 True amity with this confederate state,
 We will regard them with benignant eyes.
 Farewell, great Goddess;—fare ye well, my friends;
 O may you wrestle bravely with your foes,
 Steadfast amid the hurtling shocks of war,
 And march victorious from the battle-field.

[Exeunt ORESTES and APOLLO.]

SCENE II.

CHORUS.

Young upstart Gods have spurn'd the power
 Ordain'd by law, confirm'd by age;
 Disgraced I wander from this hour,
 And chew the cud of baffled rage.

Yet on this country, ere I go,
 My heart shall scatter venom round;
 Venom, the counterpart of woe;
 Yea, justly will I curse the ground:

Foul Leprosy and swift Decay
 Shall bring to nought the peasant's toil;
 The germs of life shall melt away,
 And deadly blotches brand the soil.

(v. 738—756.)

Why do I weep? What gain in tears?
 Shall I become this people's pest?
 Ah me, that our declining years
 Should sink, degraded and oppress!

PALLAS.

Nay, take it not to heart so wofully:—
 You are not vanquish'd, for the votes in truth
 Were equal, and exempt you from disgrace.
 And further; on the part of Zeus was given Clear evidenee, (and he, the God who spake
 The oracle, was foremost witness too,)
 That from this deed Orestes gat no blame.
 Let not the lightning of your heavy wrath
 Shrivell the soil;—continue not in anger;
 Nor by emitting poison from your lungs,
 Fell influences that gnaw the growing seeds,
 Cause nature's murrain, bleak sterility:
 And here I promise, that you shall possess
 A dwelling-place and vaulted crypts within
 This land of mine; then will you sit enthroned
 On altars bright with fatness, and exact
 Endless devotion from these citizens.

CHORUS.

Young upstart Gods have spurn'd the power
 Ordain'd by law, confirm'd by age;
 Disgraced I wander from this hour,
 And chew the eud of baffled rage.

Yet on this country, ere I go,
 My heart shall scatter venom round;
 Venom, the counterpart of woe;
 Yea, justly will I curse the ground:

Foul Leprosy and swift Decay
 Shall bring to nought the peasant's toil ;
 The germs of life shall melt away,
 And deadly blotches brand the soil.

Why do I weep ? What gain in tears ?
 Shall I become this people's pest ?
 Ah me, that our declining years
 Should sink, degraded and opprest !

PALLAS.

What degradation ? Oh ! beware, beware,
 Lest passionate excess should urge you on
 To mar the rich fecundity of Earth.
 I too rely on Zeus—what need to boast ?
 Alone of all the Gods I know the keys
 Of those dread storehouses, where sealed lie
 The thunderbolts ; but now I need them not :
 No ! rather be persuaded, and repress
 The noxious blossom of a hasty tongue ;
 Let the fierce tide of your resentment sleep,
 Since you are greatly honour'd, and received
 To fellowship with me ; so shall you gain
 The first-fruits of this land i' th' aftertime,
 Offerings for children, and for marriage-rites,
 And I shall reap your gratitude for ever.

CHORUS.

Alas, what insults have I borne !
 To think that I, the Ancient One, must dwell
 A helpless mark for hate and scorn
 On th' upper world, deserted and forlorn !
 Oh, heavy fate ! Oh, Earth and Hell !
 What pain is this that pierces like a thorn ?

Blow forth, my rage, a deadly blight :
 Oh, hear me, hear me, mother Night !
 Oh, hear thy wretched daughter call,
 Shorn of her strength by fraud, betray'd, bereft of all !

PALLAS.

I am resolved to bear your angry mood,
 For you are old, and wiser far than I,
 Though gifted with no mean intelligence.
 When you have settled on some distant shore
 You will regret us ; this can I foresee ;
 Our commonwealth shall grow with growing years ;
 Beside Erechtheus' temple shall you dwell,
 Enshrined in honour, and adored with pomp
 Greater than other nations can bestow.
 Oh, whet not then the bloody sword of strife
 Against this country, goading youthful spirits
 To fiery passion, worse than wine excites :
 Nor plucking out the hearts of fighting-cocks,
 As 'twere engraft them in my people's breasts,
 To kindle mutual animosities.
 Let foreign wars enow be found for him
 Whose bosom pants with eager thirst of fame ;
 But all domestic quarrels I gainsay.
 Such terms I offer ; take them or reject ;
 Entreat us well, you shall be well entreated,
 Shall evermore be worshipp'd, and partake
 The blessings shower'd upon this favour'd land.

CHORUS.

Alas, what insults have I borne !
 To think that I, the Ancient One, must dwell
 A helpless mark for hate and scorn
 On th' upper world, deserted and forlorn !
 Oh, heavy fate ! Oh, Earth and Hell !
 What pain is this that pierces like a thorn ?

Blow forth, my rage, a deadly blight :
 Oh, hear me, hear me, mother Night !
 Oh, hear thy wretched daughter call,
 Shorn of her strength by fraud, betray'd, bereft of all !

PALLAS.

Still must I importune, and speak you fair,
 Lest it be said that you, an ancient God,
 Were thrust aside to perish in disgrace
 By me your junior, and town-haunting men.
 Yet if you hold Persuasion in respect,
 The honey'd words that issue from my tongue,
 Why then remain : but if you still refuse
 To hear my voice, you cannot justly wreak
 Revenge upon this unoffending land.
 Your portion is assign'd, and at your choice ;
 Your worship fix'd :—accept it, and remain.

CHORUS [after a pause].

Pallas, what kind of home shall I enjoy ?

PALLAS.

A home exempt from grief ;—refuse it not.

CHORUS.

Say I accept—what privilege is mine ?

PALLAS.

Without your aid, no family shall prosper.

CHORUS.

Will you achieve that I be thus empower'd ?

PALLAS.

Aye, and will favour those who worship you.

CHORUS.

And pledge yourself to this for future time ?

PALLAS.

The surest pledge was my spontaneous promise.

CHORUS.

I yield, and do repent me of my wrath.

PALLAS.

So be it : tarry, and acquire new friends.

CHORUS.

What strains then shall I chant for their behoof?

PALLAS.

Whatever tends to unalloy'd success,
 Ask on the part of Earth and Air and Sea :—
 Let summer gales float lightly o'er the land
 Laden with sunshine ; let the fruits of Earth,
 And kine, enriching these my citizens
 With streams of plenty, never know decrease ;
 And let the human generations thrive.
 As for the wicked—root them out apace :
 For like a careful horticulturist,
 I love to see the stock of good men flourish
 Unscathed by rank and interloping weeds.
 Such are your privileges : as for me,
 Touching the brilliant jousts of friendly war,
 I'll help my nation to the foremost place,
 And cheer them with the smiles of victory.

CHORUS.

Right gladly, Pallas, shall I gain
 Thy fellowship, nor slight the town
 Where Zeus and conquering Ares reign,
 Stronghold of Faith, the head and crown
 Of worship ; in whose altars, bright
 With sacrifice, the Gods delight.
 Here, reconciled to thee and thine,
 With kindly prescience I divine
 That, quicken'd by the sunny beam,
 The fertile womb of Earth shall teem
 With gushing floods of wine and oil,
 And nature deck the happy soil.

PALLAS.

Such benefits have I bestow'd ;
 Such dark inexorable Powers
 In Athens fix their new abode,
 And bless her consecrated bowers ;

Dread Goddesses, that over all
 Man's fortunes make their influence felt :
 Who smite the wicked, and they fall ;
 But wist not whence the blow was dealt.

Some secret curse, some guilt bequeathed
 O'ertakes the proud, a silent doom :
 The sword of vengeance, never sheathed,
 Lays low their beauty in the tomb.

CHORUS.

Let winds that gender blight exhale
 Their noisome breath in distant skies ;
 Let drought and withering mildew fail
 To blast the flow'ret's opening eyes :
 Contagious Fogs, I warn you hence :
 Aroint thee, barren Pestilence !
 May ripening grain enrich the field,
 And fleecy flocks twin-offspring yield :
 And may the people o'er whose land
 These gifts are pour'd with lavish hand,
 Offer the first-fruits of the Earth,
 And praise the Gods that gave them birth.

PALLAS.

O hear, ye bulwarks of the state,
 What wealth her promises portend !
 Amongst the Gods her name is great,
 And men beneath her footstool bend :

And some blithe hearts her favour cheers,
 That sweet their hymns of gladness rise ;
 And unto some, a life of tears
 Bedims the brightness of their eyes.

CHORUS.

Untimely death, and sudden hurt
 From Athens' sons, kind Heaven! avert :
 Nor let her daughters vainly pray
 For blessings on their marriage-day :
 And you, my Sisters, that uphold
 The laws, impartial as of old,
 Ye Fates! be where you list severe ;
 But, save in kindness, come not here.

PALLAS.

I joy to hear your auguries
 In mild forgiving accents sung ;
 And much I love Persuasion's eyes,
 That watch'd the pleadings of my tongue :
 For greatly did my prayer incense
 Your wrathful mood ; but mighty Zeus,
 The patron-God of Eloquence,
 O'ercame you, and you sought a truce :
 Nor, save in bounty, shall remain
 The rivalry betwixt us twain.

CHORUS.

Let Civil War, black nurse of Crime,
 Be hush'd within this happy clime ;
 Let not the storms of Faction roar,
 Nor slake the dust with kindred gore.
 May those who cherish Peace aright,
 In hatred, as in love, unite ;
 And all the ills that plague mankind
 Shall pass them as the harmless wind.

PALLAS.

What, have ye learnt the way to bless?
 From these dread Persons I foresee
 A future fraught with happiness
 To these my citizens and me.
 Let us be wise, and court them still,
 And foster mutual good-will;
 So shall our fame be spread afar,
 And Justice shine our guiding-star.

CHORUS.

O fare ye well, 'midst all that wealth can give,
 Who sit near Zeus's ever-glorious throne:
 A virgin-goddess suffereth you to live
 Beneath her wings, and will protect her own.

PALLAS.

[Stations herself at the head of the CHORUS, where they are joined by the ESCORT of FEMALES with torches.]

Fare ye well also; but I first require,
 To guide you to your chambers underground,
 Devout processions, and the sacred Fire;
 And let the altars scatter incense round;

So shall you ward off mischief from the land,
 So crown our enterprises with success:
 Lead on, Athenians, lead your chosen band,
 And heartily your new-found Patrons bless.

CHORUS.

Farewell once more! I bid farewell to all,
 Both Gods and men, that in this town abide:
 Cling to our worship, whatsoever befall;
 So to your prayers shall nothing be denied.

PALLAS.

I praise the tone of these your promises;
 And will conduct you, by the solemn glare

Of torches, to your cavernous abodes,
 With these attendants, virgin-sentinels
 That watch mine image : Come, ye beauteous train
 Of maids and children, flower of Theseus' land,
 And reverend matrons, clad in scarlet robes ;
 Do them all honour ; let the torch-fires glow
 To light them on their way : for future years
 This company, that settles in our town,
 Shall look on you benignly, and vouchsafe
 To bless the fortunes of your countrymen.

Song of the ESCORT.

Come, ye virgins born of Night,
 Come, adored with many a rite,
 Marshall'd by a solemn train
 Homeward to your cells again :—
 While adown the glen we sweep,
 Brother-townsmen, silence keep.
 Waves on high the glimmering torch
 Pointing to yon cavern's porch ;
 Follow, girls, and as ye go
 Tripping featly, sing with me
 Merry songs of jubilee ;
 Let the sweet libations flow
 Redden'd by the fiery glow.
 Mighty Zeus, All-seeing guide,
 And Destiny with Zeus allied,
 In the hour of need came down
 Bringing aid to Pallas' town.
 Youths and maidens, sing with me
 Merry songs of jubilee.

[Exeunt.

ΑΙΣΧΥΛΟΥ ΕΥΜΕΝΙΔΕΣ.

INTRODUCTION.

PART I.

MÜLLER'S DISSERTATIONS—NUMBER OF CHOREUTE EMPLOYED IN THE TETRALOGY—NUMBER OF THE CHORUS IN THE EUMENIDES—DISPOSITION OF THE CHORUS—SCENIC ARRANGEMENTS—DUTY OF AVENGING BLOOD—DUTY OF ORESTES—POSITION OF THE HOMICIDE—EXPIATION FOR BLOOD—HILASMOI AND KATHARMOI—PURIFICATION OF ORESTES—ATTIC COURTS FOR HOMICIDE—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN ÆSCHYLUS—EXEGESIS OF THE JUS SACRUM—MYTHIC CONCEPTION OF THE ERINNYES—THEIR CULTUS GENERALLY—AT ATHENS—ÆSCHYLUS'S CONCEPTION OF THEM—ZEUS SOTER—POETICAL COMPOSITION OF THE ORESTEA.

§ 1. No edition of the Eumenides of Æschylus would now be considered complete unless it in some sort recognised the valuable Müller's Dissertations. Dissertations of C. O. Müller. The Cambridge translation of this work, published in 1835, is now out of print: the present Editor has therefore judged it expedient to draw up an Analysis of the principal Essays, sufficiently brief to be comprised within the limits of an Introductory Chapter: to which will be added a Second Part, compiled from various sources, and containing a critique upon the more speculative and unsupported portion of Müller's book—his second Dissertation—which cannot be safely submitted to the reader's unqualified perusal.

2. Æschylus having determined to present himself as a candidate for the Tragic Prize, with his Trilogv of the "Orestea" and the "Proteus," a Satyric Drama, Xenocles of Aphidna was appointed to furnish him with a Chorus. The question here naturally arises for our consideration, how many Choreute did Xenocles engage to provide? We are told by the ancient Grammarians, "that the usual number of the Tragic Chorus was Number of Choreute employed in the Tetralogy. Müller's Dissertations, pp. 47—54.

either twelve or fifteen:” and this statement has always been understood to imply, that the said twelve or fifteen individuals performed the choric parts in all the four plays successively. 3. But besides the great difficulty of training people of no very high attainments in Art to undertake so many different characters, sometimes male, and sometimes female; we know that Æschylus frequently employs in his dramas a number of persons, who are, properly speaking, neither actors nor Chorcutæ, although they bear a strong resemblance to the latter. Of such a description are the Areopagites and the Escort of Women in the Eumenides: the last-mentioned body even sing the closing ode of the play. 4. Whence we may infer, first, that in addition to the proper Chorus of each individual drama, the one belonging to some other part of the same Tetralogy occasionally appears as a kind of Accessory Chorus; and secondly, that the regular Chorus of one drama was quite distinct from that of the others. Nay, in Choeph. 1044, we find the regular Chorus of Women, and the Accessory one of Furies, actually seen on the stage together, where Orestes exclaims,—

*Δμῶαὶ γυναῖκες, αἶδε Γοργόνων δίκην
Φαιοκχίτωνες καὶ πεπλεκτανημένοι
Πυκνοῖς δράκουσιν οὐκέτ’ ἄν μείναιμ’ ἐγώ.*

And although the Choephoræ are not supposed to behold the Furies here, their presence is unquestionably visible to the audience. We may, therefore, classify the Principal and Accessory Choruses belonging to the three plays of the Oresteia, in the following manner:—

I. Old Men. Women from II.	II. Women. Furies from III.	III. Furies. Old Men from I. Women from II.
----------------------------------	-----------------------------------	--

In the closing scene of the Eumenides, it is evident that all these three Choruses must be on the stage at once: for the Areopagites have not quitted their position when Pallas summons the Escort of Women.

5. These considerations afford ample evidence that the whole number of Choreutæ assigned for a Tetralogy was far greater than twelve or fifteen. Now the Tragic Chorus was immediately derived from the Dithyrambic; and that, we know, consisted of fifty persons. This brings us nearer the mark; but the number 50 must be taken with some modification. The Dithyrambic Chorus was cyclic; that is, it danced in a circle round the Dionysian Altar; the Tragic was quadrangular (τετραγώνος), and drawn up in rank and file. It was, therefore, a composite number; and as the components could scarcely be so far apart as that the one should double the other, viz. 5×10 , so as to make up the number 50, we may more reasonably conclude that it was $6 \times 8 = 48$: which, if divided equally, would allow twelve choreutæ for each play. And this is probably what the Grammarians meant, in their statement "that the Tragic chorus consisted of twelve or fifteen."

6. In the Agamemnon, it is clear that the number of the regular Chorus was twelve. When the Gerontes hear the death-cry of their sovereign, and are debating what course to pursue, twelve suffrages only are given; and if it be true that they re-appear in the Eumenides as Arcopagites, this was unquestionably their number. In the Persæ, Supplikes, and Sept. cont. Thebas, proof might be given that the Chorus likewise consisted of twelve. 7. But in the Choephoræ and Eumenides this is not so certain; in fact there is strong evidence in favour of a Chorus of fifteen for the Eumenides. For in such of the Odes as are Commatic (sung by different individuals), seven distinct voices, or rather pairs of voices, are frequently apparent; these with the Leader make up the number fifteen; and Hermann (De Choro Eumenidum, Diss. I.) has proved to the general satisfaction that this number was the true one.¹

¹ One of Müller's arguments in support of this proposition is somewhat surprising. He tells us, "that there is one passage in the Dialogue where the number 7 very clearly presents itself." This passage is the following line, (v. 125.)

ἮΓΕΜ. φράζου'

XOP. λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε.

Now we look in vain for this line in any edition of the text except Müller's own. The MSS. have it thus: XOP. λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, φράζου. So that Müller

pp. 61—61.

8. The evolutions of the Chorus bear a close analogy to those of a Λόχος drawn up in order of battle; whence Æschylus often uses the word λόχος for χόρος (Eumen. v. 46), and military terms were employed to designate its several divisions. The Choreutæ enter in rank (ζυγά) three abreast, and file (στοίχοι) generally five deep. When they take up their position in the Orchestra, the individuals fronting the audience are called ἀριστεροστάται, or “left-hand men,” (abcde in opp. Fig. ;) theirs was reckoned the most honourable place, and in their centre stood the Leader, on the platform of the Thymele, and therefore somewhat higher than the rest. Immediately behind them are the λαυροστάται (fghik), so called from standing in the alley (λαύρα) formed by the two other lines. The third and hindmost row are called δεξιόστάται. 9. The annexed figure represents the Chorus in two positions: first, in its Πάροδος, or entrance on the stage by the side-passages of the orchestra; secondly, in its place about the Thymele, or centre of the orchestra itself.¹ These positions are usually, but not necessarily, adopted by the Chorus at its first alters the MS. reading so as to suit his theory, and then quotes the altered line in support of it! Not less strange is the argument on which he grounds this alteration. “The Scholiast,” he says, in p. 61, “describes this verse as a dimeter brachy-catalectic, with a hephthemimer of tribrachs;

$\underline{\quad} - \quad | \quad \cup - \quad | \quad \underline{\quad} - \quad | \quad \cup \cup \cup \quad | \quad \cup \cup \cup \quad | \quad \cup \cup \cup \quad | \quad \cup$

and must have read the line thus—

Μὲ μῦ· μὲ μῦ· φράζον· λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε, λάβε.

We are not therefore without warrant for considering μὲ μῦ· μὲ μῦ· as ‘extra metrum,’ repeating λάβε seven times, and making the verse a complete Iambic line.” We doubt whether any reader will be satisfied with such a warrant. All that can be gathered from the Scholiast is, that the word φράζον as pronounced by the Leader, did in all probability precede the repetitions of λάβε. Hermann has argued this matter at great length in his Opusc. vol. vi. p. 35.

¹ Θυμέλη, from θύω, properly “an altar,” including the platform on which the altar was raised. Its position in the Theatre was derived from the Dionysian altar, round which the ancient Dithyrambic Chorus executed its dances. The reader should, however, be informed that Hermann (De Re Scenicâ in Orestea) distinctly denies that this Thymele could have been so placed, and even the existence of the altar itself. His words are:—“Vanum est commentum Müllerii, thymelen in orchestrâ fuisse putantis, quam in lignâ illâ orchestrâ, quæ fabulârum agendarum causâ extruebatur, nec fuisse ullam, et in quibusdam fabulis (Prometheo, Philoctetâ, Cyclope) ne potuisse quidem aram, ut in locis desertis, cogitari, demonstratum est.”

first entrance: for instance, there is an exception in the Eumenides, in which the disposition into rank and file does not occur until it is time to sing the Binding Hymn: and the Parodos is announced by the words ἄγε δὴ καὶ χορὸν ἄψωμεν, v. 297. In all the previous part of the Drama, the Choreutæ move about the stage dispersedly (σποράδην), and their songs (κομματικὰ) are equally irregular.

10. In the opening scene of the Eumenides, the Delphian priestess is discovered praying before an altar, in the outer court of the temple of Apollo. This altar, we learn from the Ion of Euripides, was adorned with wooden images of the gods (ξόανα), which it was customary for suppliants to embrace. They perhaps represented Gaia, Themis, Phæbe, and Phæbus, the four successive holders of the seat of prophecy; for it is to these Deities that the Priestess first addresses her prayers, as if they were actually present.

Scenic arrangements, pp. 88—99.

11. When the Prologue is concluded, the interior of the temple is suddenly exposed to view; Orestes sitting on the Omphalus, Apollo by his side, the Furies asleep on the surrounding seats, and Hermes in the background; altogether forming a group of no fewer than eighteen persons. How was this large company exhibited at once to the spectators? It has generally been supposed that the Eccyclema or Exostra was employed for this purpose. But in every instance where this machine was beyond all question introduced, those scenes only are exhibited which would naturally take place within doors, and in cases where the subjects of such scenes would be unable of themselves to come out on the stage. [See Æsch. Agam. 1345, Choeph. 967; Soph. Elect. 1450, Antig. 1293, Ajax 346, Ced. R. 1297; Eurip. Hippol. 818, Med. 1314.] 12. Besides, the number of persons thus wheeled forward is never above three or four; but here no fewer than eighteen must be exhibited, and the floor of the Eccyclema must represent the area of the temple, on which the Furies have to perform their evolutions. These considerations make the use of the Eccyclema impossible in the present case. We are therefore led to suppose that, during the Prologue, the interior of the temple was concealed by a παραπέτασμα, or curtain, extending the whole breadth and height of the stage, which was withdrawn after the exit of the Priestess.¹ 13. The next change of scene is at v. 226, where we are transported from Delphi to Athens, and must suppose a long interval of time to have elapsed during the wanderings of Orestes. This change was easily effected: nothing more being needed than a contrivance in the centre door to remove the Omphalus and bring forward the ancient image of Pallas: thus the temple of Apollo becomes transformed into that of Athene Polias. Here the scene continues without interruption until the end of the Play.

14. In v. 653, where Pallas speaks of Mars' Hill as before the eyes of the audience, we must suppose a distant prospect of the hill opposite the citadel to have been represented on a περίακτος, or scene-painting, and that the Goddess pointed to this picture. When the Areopagites have taken their seats in the Orchestra, and Pallas, in v. 536, bids the people be silent, she addresses the whole audience as well as the persons on the stage: no doubt actual blasts of the trumpet pealed through the theatre, and the herald's cry, "Ἀκούετε λεῶ," was heard. Thus are the entire Athenian people irresistibly drawn in to bear their part in the drama.

15. The duty of avenging blood, at Athens, devolved ex-clusively upon the kindred of the deceased; not as though homicide were no violation of the public peace, but because the avenging it was deemed a sacred office, which could no more be taken from the relatives than the right of burying their dead, or succession to a patrimony. The words of the law, preserved in Demosth. c. Macart. p. 1069, are as follows: "The kinsmen of the deceased, within the degree of first cousin inclusive, shall issue a proclamation in the market-place, charging the homicide to hold aloof from the altars and temples in the city, and from all assemblies for the exercise of religious rites; and they shall be supported in the prosecution by the other kindred, and the members of their Phratría." 16. It was only when the dying man forgave his slayer that this prosecution was omitted. Thus the idea of vengeance as a claim due to the murdered kinsman was familiar to the Greeks in the time of Æschylus; though the State had now assumed the office of mediator, and the avenger was obliged to lay his indictment, if for wilful murder, before the Areopagus, if for manslaughter, before the Ephetae.

17. The accused was at liberty to take flight before sentence was passed: but if, after conviction for murder, he still remained in the country, his execution then became the business of the State.

Duty of avenging blood,
pp. 124—132.

After a verdict of manslaughter the prosecutor and accused sometimes made a compromise at once, but generally the latter quitted the country, and remained an exile until one of the relatives of the deceased took compassion on him, and made good his reconciliation with the others.

18. In the Heroic ages, the punishment for homicide was more severe, for the pursuit might be carried beyond the frontiers, nor did any city of refuge, sanctuary, or claims of hospitality, protect the fugitive. (See Hom. Odyss. xv. 278.) Even when not pursued by the avenger, the murderer was universally regarded as a polluted person, and excluded in particular from his Phratría and from all religious ceremonies. So the Erinyes say of Orestes, v. 625, ποίοισι βωμοῖς χρώμενος τοῖς δημίοις, ποία δὲ χέρνιψ φρατόρων προσδέξεται;

and in Homer, Il. ix. 64, Nestor, speaking of civil war, which is in fact murder, says,

*ἀφρήτωρ, ἀθέμιστος, ἀνέστιός ἐστιν ἐκεῖνος,
ὃς πολέμου ἔραται ἐπιδημίου, ὀκρυβέντος.*

Duty of
Orestes,
pp. 131—137.

19. Clytemnestra having murdered her husband, was expected at least to quit her home and her country's altars according to law: and this sentence the Council of Elders in the Agamemnon pronounced against her. But having the support of Ægisthus, she imagined herself superior to the law, and so remained. The natural avenger of Agamemnon was his son Orestes; and Æschylus emphatically declares the strictness of this obligation, and the infamy of neglecting it, in Apollo's admonitions to Orestes, Choeph. 267—294. But notwithstanding these motives to vengeance, it would have been impious in him to have pursued his mother had she taken to flight; whereas, daring as she did to remain and still sacrifice at the public altars, her immediate death became justifiable and even necessary; because recourse could be had to no higher powers for her punishment, where she and Ægisthus were supreme.

20. Accordingly, Æschylus represents Orestes as by no means repentant of the deed: in Eum. v. 566, he says, καὶ δεῦρό γ' αἰὲ τὴν τύχην οὐ μέμφομαι. Euripides, on the contrary, less true to the ancient customs and traditions, exhibits him as the remorseful sinner, condemning his own act as impious and needless, and apprehending in Apollo a destroying spirit. See Eurip. Orest. 283, 1685. With regard to the vengeance directed against Orestes, this was peculiarly the office of the Erinyes: it could not lawfully be undertaken by any of Clytemnestra's relatives, because Orestes was a constituted avenger of blood, and, therefore, legally speaking, justified in his act.

21. The shedder of blood was regarded amongst the Greeks with mixed feelings. On the one hand, he was avoided with a kind of dread, excluded from all sanctuaries, religious ceremonies, and courts of law; and himself studious to avoid all contact and conversation with his fellow-men. (Eum. 268, 426; Eurip. Iph. in Taur. 947, sqq.) On the other hand, he was the object of a certain peculiar awe or respect, as an ἰκέτης, or distressed person in want of protection; and it was the duty of all men, αἰδεῖσθαι τὸν ἰκέτην, "to respect the claims of the suppliant," and to grant his demands. In Hom. Il. xxiv. 480, these feelings are well described:

Position of the fugitive homicide,
pp. 137-140.

ὡς δ' ὅτ' ἄν ἄνδρ' ἄτη πυκινὴ λάβῃ, ὅστ' ἐνὶ πατρὶ φῶτα κατακτείνας ἄλλων ἐξίκετο δῆμον ἄνδρὸς ἐς ἀγνίτῳ, θάμβος δ' ἔχει εἰσορόωντας, ὡς Ἀχιλεὺς θάμβησεν, ἰδὼν Πρίαμον θεοειδέα.

22. This passage proves how great a change in the suppliant's position was wrought by his purification; a prominent feature in the Eumenides: and herein the term προστρόπιαιος occupies an important place. Its proper sense is, like ἰκέτης, "one who applies for protection;" but being generally coupled with the notion of a fugitive homicide not yet cleansed, it takes the meaning of "homo piacularis," (Eum. 168, Choeph. 285.) and in the Eumenides is used in the peculiar sense of "a suppliant for purification." Such was Orestes at Delphi—at Athens he is no longer προστρόπιος in this sense, having already made expiation, but simply ικέτης. (See Eum. 229, 275.)

for blood: in general,
pp. 141—145.

23. As the avenging of blood had for its object the expulsion of the manslayer, so the rites of purification were designed to reinstate him in the society of his countrymen. Like the Jewish "cities of refuge" these rites were only applicable to the justifiable homicide,—the wilful murderer was not allowed to return.

24. The first example of expiation from blood-guiltiness, according to the Ionian legends, was Ixion, the Phlegyan chieftain. He had slain his father-in-law, and wandered over the earth in wild frenzy, till Zeus himself became his cleanser. (Eum. 687.) Opposed in a manner to Ixion was Hercules, to whom the Dorian chiefs traced their origin; he several times has recourse to the rites of expiation, and always submits to its requirements, however severe: and in Hesiod's κατάλογοι, Hercules' war against Pylos arises from a refusal on the part of Neleus to give him absolution.

'Ιλασμοὶ and καθαρμοὶ,
pp. 146—161.

25. There were two kinds of ceremonies which it was necessary for the homicide to observe: ἱλασμοὶ, "ceremonies of atonement," and καθαρμοὶ, "ceremonies of purification." In the former, the offerings were the same as those used in the worship of the dead—libations of water, honey-cakes (μελί-κρατα), and victims cut in pieces and burnt. The Deities to whom they were offered were unquestionably those of the lower world; Zeὺs Μειλίχιος is the same as Zeὺs Χθόνιος or Αἰδῆs; for in the Attic worship of the Meilichian God the victims were swine, and the rites held at night, just as they were to the Chthonian. 26. Again, when ἱλασμοὶ are offered to Apollo, we must understand not the Olympian Apollo, but rather the Chthonian Dragon, guardian of the old Earth-oracle; whom Apollo slew, and in whose memory the festival of the Delphinia was established.¹

¹ According to this, Apollo becomes identified with the Dragon actually slain by himself! a theory somewhat difficult to believe. Is it not more probable that he was worshipped as a Χθόνιος θεός in his character of "the God of Plagues and Pestilence," in which character he slew the children of Niobe, &c.?

We see, then, that in expiation for blood the following Deities had to be propitiated: Ζεὺς Μειλίχιος, Apollo Χθόνιος, the soul of the slain person, and the Erinnys proceeding from this soul.

27. These ceremonies were always based on the idea that the slayer must atone for the guilt by the forfeit of his own life. But this life was redeemable in various ways: 1st, by servitude, generally of eight years' duration, (as in the instances of Cadmus, who served Ares as the Dragon's father; of Apollo, who served Hades the invincible (ἄδμητος) and Hecate; and of Hercules, mentioned in Æsch. Agam. 1040). 2dly. By the substitution of a victim, symbolically denoting the surrender of the slayer's own life. Amongst the Greeks this victim was a ram, as amongst the Jews it was a goat; and we know that black rams were the ordinary sacrifice to the dead.. See Eurip. Elect. 92, 513; Hor. Sat. i. 8. 28; Pausan. v. 13. 2.

28. The καθαρμοὶ attached themselves closely to the ceremonies above described. Swine, the victims sacrificed to the infernal powers as peace-offerings, served also for the rites of purification. Sucking-pigs were slaughtered in such a way that the blood spirted on the manslayer's hands, and was thus supposed to wash away the human blood which clung to them. (Eum. 273. 427.) Water was also used as a means of purification (Eum. 430); thus Achelous, whose name denotes water, cleanses Alcmaeon from his mother's blood, (Apollod. iii. 7. 5; comp. Pausan. ii. 31. 11.) The Deities to be invoked are the same as in the ἱλασμοί: Zeus Meilichios is also Zeus Katharsios; and Apollo is peculiarly the God of Purification, and as such is addressed by the Priestess, Eum. vv. 62, 63.¹

29. The mythic tale of Orestes' residence at Delphi, whence he sets out as avenger of blood, and whither he returns as Purification of Orestes, pp. 161—165. προστρόπιαιος, in order to be cleansed by Apollo, is of very ancient origin. Several other places claimed the glory of his purification: Parrhasia in Arcadia (Eurip. Orest. 1646), Ceryncea

in Achaia, Trœzen, and Rhegium. Æschylus himself implies that many different acts of cleansing had been performed on him :—

πάλαι πρὸς ἄλλοις ταῦτ' ἀφιερῶμεθα οἴκοισι, καὶ βοτοῖσι καὶ ῥυτοῖς πόροις.—Eum. v. 429.

30. During the long interval that elapses between vv. 225 and 226, Orestes is supposed to visit various countries beyond sea (comp. vv. 77, 241), and the allusion is probably to Rhegium : Æschylus omits all mention of the Tauric voyage, and the return with Iphigenia. When purified by Apollo, though no longer a polluted person, nor an outcast from society, he is not yet liberated from the Erinyes : the deep resentment of his mother's Manes still remains, and the Gods alone can rescue him by a formal trial and acquittal.

31. Solon entrusted the judicial cognizance of homicide to two courts—the Areopagus and the Ephetaë. The Areopagus, composed of those citizens who had held the dignity of Archon, took charge of all trials for wilful murder, and was considered supreme. The Ephetaë (so called ὅτι ἐφιάσι τῷ ἀνδροφόνῳ τὸν ἀνδρηλάτην) were fifty-one men, of noble birth and irreproachable character, all above fifty years of age, who held their sittings in one or other of the four courts of justice. In cases of manslaughter, they met at the Palladium ; in cases of justifiable homicide, at the Delphinium, or sometimes at the Prytaneum ; when a person had gone into temporary exile for manslaughter, they tried his cause at Phreatto or Zea. 32. But the tribunal of the Ephetaë gradually declined in public estimation ; it was therefore natural that the ancient legends should all be made to redound to the glory of the Areopagus, nor would any Athenian conversant with history be surprised, that Orestes should be tried before that assembly. Yet we may think it strange that the legend of Orestes was attached to the Areopagus, and not to the Delphinium. The latter court took cognizance of all cases where a person pleaded justifiable homicide ; and Demosthenes cites Orestes as an instance in point. 33. Nevertheless, the Hill of Ares would seem a fitter tribunal in this case, than the temple of the Delphinian Apollo. The criminal brought before the latter is not one conscience-stricken on account of his deed; no Erinnys harasses him; but Clytemnestra, though legally slain by the avenger, yet, as a mother, has her Erinnys: and herein lies the significance of the Areopagus. It decides between these vengeful Goddesses and the object of their resentment: and this is proved both by the locality itself (for the Furies' temple was at the base of Mars' Hill), and also by the solemnities observed at the trial of Orestes.

34. Every ancient court had its President (ἡγεμῶν) to investigate the cases presented; after receiving his sanction they were brought up for trial. At Athens this office was held by the Ἄρχων Βασιλεύς: in Æschylus it is filled by Athena, who appoints a jury, "dat judices," as the Prætor at Rome. The pre-cognizance (ἀνάκρισις) is exhibited in the scene where Athena inquires the name, office, and legal demands of each party (vv. 386—467). Whereupon she finds a true bill for both, and requires them to bring their witnesses and evidence into court. Refusing to admit the πρόκλησις (provocatio ad jusjurandum) in this case, the Goddess next introduces the suit, having convened her intended jury of Areopagites: the parties plead against each other in short sentences; and Apollo, as Orestes' advocate, explains the law. 35. After this comes the institution of the Areopagus (Θεσμός, v. 462), which is perfectly appropriate in this place: for the judges are now to vote after serious deliberation and solemn oaths; and their inauguration must be considered as the central point of the Drama. The voting follows; and the numbers being found equal, Orestes is acquitted, before Athena has given her vote in his favour. For the much-disputed "Calculus Minervæ" is an imaginary ballot, not an actual one; the numbers being equal, a white ψῆφος is supposed to be added in favour of the accused; signifying that mercy naturally prevails over severity, in an equally balanced case.

Exegesis of the Jus Sacrum,
pp.182—185.

36. The Exegesis, at Athens, applied wholly to the unwritten law, or precedents handed down to posterity by oral tradition. Such persons as could best define these precedents were called ἐξηγηταὶ τῶν ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων (Interpretes Religionis), and their office was to expound this law (ἐξηγεῖσθαι = de jure sacro responderere). This office Apollo assumes in the Eumenides. 37. In pursuance of it, he first explains to Orestes the duty of vengeance (v. 565), and subsequently, in the same character, instructs the Areopagites on the unavoidable task that devolved upon Orestes, as avenger of blood; and argues, that duty to the father required the sacrifice of the mother, as not being so near of kin to the son: a subtle plea, which was probably quite in character with the arguments usually put forward at Athens in such complex cases.

The Erinnyes; meaning of the name, and mythic conception of them, pp.186—191.

38. The word Ἐρινύς (not Ἐριννύς, see Herm. Pref. to Antig. p. 19, and Blomf. Gloss. on ἐλινύειν, Prom. Vinct. 53) expresses that “deep offence,” “bitter displeasure,” which ensues when sacred rights are violated by the persons who ought to have most respected them. In the early Greek poets this was particularly applied to near kindred, as father, mother, or elder brother; but the poor man, or the suppliant, if insolently treated, also had his Erinnyes. Afterwards the term became more restricted in meaning: parricide especially called forth an Erinnyes, and Æschylus attributes one to the crime of neglecting the duties of an avenger of blood. The sensible manifestation of the Erinnyes is Ara: when the suppressed feelings burst forth in sudden imprecations, as in the case of Œdipus: hence Æschylus gives the Erinnyes the name of Ἀραί (Eum. 395). 39. According to the ancient Greek religion, which contemplated all human life as the working of a higher and supernatural agency, the Erinnyes that required atonement, and the Erinnyes that brought the mischief, were considered identical: though we are now obliged to distinguish them, and suppose the existence of Goddesses under the latter mode of expression; under the former, merely a human passion. Hesiod, in his Theogony, makes the outrage committed by Cronus on his father Uranus, the first invasion of the rights of consanguinity, which demanded an Erinny: hence the Deities then called forth were, properly speaking, "the Erinnyes of Uranus." 40. But, as mythic conceptions gradually acquire fixity of shape, so these Deities, in process of time, become independent spirits and active avengers (Ποινῆ). The idea under which they were worshipped at Athens, as Σεμναί, was founded on a more extensive system of views and thoughts, and deserves a separate consideration.

41. The widely diffused worship of the Erinnyes or Eumenides, called Semnæ at Athens, cannot be understood if we regard them merely as divinities resulting from individual circumstances, or peculiar states of mind. Many traces show that they were a particular form of the Deities who rule the earth and the lower world, and send up the blessings of the year, viz. Demeter and Cora. The meaning of this is simply that these Goddesses—usually mild and benign—may be perverted by human sin into resentful, destructive Powers. 42. Traces of this Demeter-Erinny exist particularly in the legends concerning the ancient kings of Thebes. The beginning of mischief was the slaying of the Dragon (son of Ares and Erinny Tilphossa) by Cadmus: Laius is the first to feel the curse; Œdipus is altogether its victim. But as the legend always represented Œdipus as finally reconciled to his persecuting Erinny, so the traditions of his burial-place were in close connexion with the cultus of the Erinnyes. Thus Sophocles makes him reach the goal of his sufferings in the grove of the Semnæ at Athens, and after his death assume the character of a mysteriously operating divinity, producing eternal weal to the country where he had obtained rest and reconciliation. 43. In all these Theban legends, Demeter, as a punient Power, is the predominating principle. Subsequently, the mention of Demeter in this character was shunned with a feeling of dread; and the Erinnyes, as independent Deities, took the place of the Tilphossian Demeter-Erinny: and thus we understand how, after their wrath was appeased, they became Eumenides, or benevolent, bountiful Goddesses. The name Εὐμενίδες was, strictly speaking, native at Sicily: hence Æschylus, who emphatically calls them Σεμναί

the Semnæ, generally,
pp. 191—206

and εὐφρονες, never mentions the word Εὐμενίδες. (Comp. note on v. 982.) 44. Nevertheless, the transmutation of the Erinnyes into Eumenides was an essential part of the legend of Orestes; as in the case of Œdipus, the persecuting Deity becomes a bounteous being to him and his posterity. Æschylus, it is true, is silent about this reconciliation: he attributes the cessation of the Furies' wrath to the eloquence of Pallas; whereupon their benedictions are bestowed, not on Orestes, but on Athens. And since Pallas repeatedly ascribes to them an actual power over the gifts they promise, (such as the fruits of Earth, &c. vv. 884—906), we here recognise the double influence before mentioned; they are Ἐρίννες for destruction, Εὐμενέϊς for blessings.

Worship of the Semnæ
at Athens,
pp. 206—209.

45. One side of the Temple of the Semnæ at Athens rested on the base of the hill of Ares, whose cultus was closely united with that of the Erinnyes: the other side lay towards the Acropolis, a locality which Æschylus designates by the expression πρὸς δόμοις Ἐρεχθέως, v. 857. There was a chasm in this temple, as at Colonus, through which the Deities were said to have returned to earth after their reconciliation with Orestes.

46. Their worship was always celebrated by a numerous train of female attendants, called "Hesychidæ" from the solemn silence always observed (εὐφημία). The sacrifices, performed sometimes at night, (hence perhaps the torches mentioned in v. 977,) consisted of slaughtered victims, especially black sheep; and water unmixed with wine (νηφάλια), but with an infusion of honey (μελίκρατα), and possibly of oil. (Soph. Œd. C. 483.)

idea of the Erinnyes,
pp. 210—218.

47. The contrast between the elder and younger race of Gods, as expressed by Æschylus, rests mainly on the distinction between an absolute natural necessity and a free and voluntary agency. As heaven and earth, sun and moon, which belong to the old race, manifest their agency in eternal and immutable duration, so the Erinnyes are to be regarded as a natural law of the moral world: without regard to circumstances, they naturally fasten on him who has outraged the sacred rights of consanguinity; and never suffer this outrage to vanish from their memory, but visit it on successive generations. (Eum. v. 894.) 48. The Olympian

Gods, on the contrary, in their whole agency refer so much to specific circumstances, that they are incapable of representing these universal laws. Their interference with human affairs is direct and personal. But in the compromise which the Erinnyes make of their resentment, the newly established cultus is a pledge of the further exercise of their inherent rights upon earth. 49. This contrast Æschylus everywhere maintains in a very marked manner; nevertheless, he shows a conviction that the conflict between the ancient Gods and the ruling Powers is merely transient, and preparatory to a higher development of things. With him the world of Olympian Gods is in perfect unison with the original Powers, and, like Pindar, he strives to do away with the legends that imply their antagonism. 50. With regard to the external appearance of the Erinnyes, Æschylus gives them the snaky hair and pendent tongues of Gorgons—the hideous expression of Harpies—and the black dress which marks them for the daughters of Night. He does not give them wings as Euripides does (Orest. 317), because the image of hounds was ever before his eyes—and in Choeph. (911, 1150) he plainly calls them κύνες, as does Sophocles also—to which image the long pendent tongue of the Gorgoneum was admirably suited.

51. In contrast with the Erinnyes, as Titanian Powers exercising a moral law with the strictness of a law of nature, we have in our drama Apollo and Pallas, who establish and protect the order of human society. Yet so intimately connected were these Deities with mankind and their concerns, that Æschylus does not conceive them adequate, great and wise though they be, to terminate the conflict with the primordial Powers. Throughout the Oresteia he exhibits dimly and in the background, and therefore with more poetical effect, a third Power, Zeus Soter, pervading the universe, and conducting the course of events to the best possible issue. (Comp. Choeph. 1, 2; id. 242; Eum. 730.) The name Σωτήρ is therefore similar to τέλειος. 52. The cultus of Zeus Soter was widely diffused among the Greeks. With it were connected the three draughts taken by them after meals; the first to Olympian Zeus, the second to

pp. 218—223.

Earth and the Heroes, the third to Zeus Soter. In this ceremony the Olympian Gods are first opposed to the Chthonians, and then Zeus Soter is conceived as a third Power, and Lord equally over both worlds. (Comp. Æsch. Suppl. 24, and Plato, Polit. ix. p. 583.)

53. Thus we see that generally after the atonement of particular transgressions, Zeus Soter interposes as a consummating Deity, who tempers the opposition between the serene Gods of the world above and the gloomy powers of the realms below; and especially he is conceived by Æschylus as a paternal God, and therefore the peculiar guardian of paternal rights, holding the father of the household to be of higher account than the mother. (Eum. v. 731.)

Poetical Composition,
pp. 224—239.

54. Tragedy is defined by Aristotle as "an exhibition tending by the operation of pity and fear to purify the mind from passions" (κάθαρσις τῶν παθημάτων). In contrast to the Epic, which never suspends the peaceful flow of equable emotions, the essential aim of Tragedy is to draw the soul out of its quiet state, and hurl it into a tempest of conflicting elements, which are, in the course of their progress and development, so purified and exalted, as to leave the soul in calm and elevated composure.

55. These characteristics are found prominent in the Oresteian Trilogy. The Agamemnon, beginning with songs of joy and exultation, gradually rouses the mind to horror and passion: these feelings are more fully developed in the Choephoræ, but sobered down and ennobled in the Eumenides. The main idea of the Trilogy is to show how a curse rooted in the human race, and generating one misdeed out of another, is averted by the control of the Saviour God. The secondary aim is to inculcate respect for established institutions, and particularly for the Arcopagus. The delineation of character, as is usual with Æschylus, occupies the third place, subordinate to the development of the fable, as the fable itself was subordinate to the main idea.

56. The Oresteia being the only extant specimen of a complete trilogy, must form the groundwork of our whole study of Æschylus. Taking it for a model, we may easily ascertain the positions occupied by his other dramas in their respective trilogies. They are all, without exception, intermediate plays: the Eumenides is the only concluding one that we have. The reason why (with the exception of the Oresteia) none but second pieces of Æschylus have been preserved, is, perhaps, that the quiet progress and minute details of the first pieces, and the tendency to mythic speculations in the third, had less attractions for the later ages of antiquity than the equably sustained pathos of the intermediate plays.

PART II.

MÜLLER'S SECOND DISSERTATION—THEORY CONCERNING THE POLITICAL OBJECTS OF THE EUMENIDES—ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE AREOPAGUS—ITS POWERS—REVERED BY THE PEOPLE—ABRIDGED—HOW FAR, ACCORDING TO MEIER AND BOECKH—MÜLLER'S FIRST, SECOND, AND THIRD ARGUMENTS REFUTED—HIS GENERAL DEDUCTION—CHRONOLOGICAL DIFFICULTY—REAL OBJECTS OF ÆSCHYLUS—ARGIVE ALLIANCE—CONCLUSION.

Müller's
Second Dissertation.

57. WE have hitherto found in Müller a useful and (with some slight qualifications) trustworthy guide to the proper study of Æschylus: as indeed he may well be considered in all matters connected with the mythology, antiquities, and local customs of the Greeks. We are now to regard him in a somewhat different light. Having too hastily taken for granted the unwarrantable assertion of a brother critic, he has built thereon a theory by no means borne out by the evidence he adduces in its support. 58. The assertion to which we allude, made in the first instance by Meier, is this: "That by the motion of Ephialtes the Areopagus was deprived of the whole of its jurisdiction in cases of homicide." Upon which is founded the following opinion of Müller: "That the special object of Æschylus in his Eumenides, was to plead the cause of the Areopagus, and to dissuade the Athenians from depriving it of its jurisdiction in cases of homicide." 59. In order to examine this theory at greater length, we have purposely reserved the consideration of Müller's Second Dissertation ("on the Political Relations of the Eumenides,") for a separate chapter. But before entering on the discussion, we shall do well to lay before the reader a brief account of the Areopagus itself; to trace its growth as a political power at Athens; and to enumerate the functions it actually possessed and exercised at the period when it was attacked by the Democratic party.

Theory concerning the political objects of the Eumenides.

60. The Senate of Areopagus is known to have existed as The Areopagus. a court for the trial of homicide long before the time of Solon: but that legislator was the first who definitely arranged and legalized its constitution; he also enlarged its authority to such an extent, that he may almost be considered as its founder. As we have already stated (§ 31), its numbers were annually reinforced by those citizens who had worthily discharged the office of Archon. The members therefore were not taken from the many, but the few; not elected, but succeeding to their new dignity, at the end of every year, by a kind of hereditary right; they were not accountable (ὑπεύθυνοι) as were all the other magistrates of the state; and finally, they alone, when once invested, enjoyed a life tenure.

61. Such being its exclusive prerogatives, we cannot be surprised that this court should gradually come to be placed in direct antagonism with the rapid progress of an aspiring democracy. The measure carried by Aristides after the battle of Plataea, by which all classes of citizens were made eligible for the Archonship, did not, as might have been expected, tend to diminish the oligarchic character of the Areopagus. On the contrary, it afterwards stood forward more prominently than ever, as the representative and rallying point of the Aristocratic party: Cimon became its staunchest supporter: Pericles, on behalf of the democratic faction, its most inveterate opponent.

62. The powers of the Areopagus, as defined and established its powers. by the laws of Solon, were twofold:—Judicial and Senatorial. Its judicial authority extended over the following crimes, enumerated by Demosthenes, cont. Aristocr. p. 627: Wilful Murder: Wounding with intent to kill: Arson: and Poisoning. Its senatorial functions were of a less limited character. Besides taking under its cognizance a variety of offences, such as Impiety, Sacrilege, Treason, Conspiracy against the Republic, &c., the Areopagus claimed an extensive and undefined control over the lives and behaviour of the citizens in general, like that of the Censors at Rome: it reprimanded or punished all immoral conduct, indolence, prodigality, and such-like vices; in a word, as Isocrates tells us (Areop. p. 149),—Ἐθεώρουν τὸν βίον τὸν ἐκάστου, καὶ τοὺς ἀκοσμοῦντας ἀνήγον εἰς τὴν βουλὴν ἢ δὲ τοὺς μὲν ἐνουθέτει, τοῖς δ' ἠπείλει, τοὺς δ' ὡς προσήκον ἐκόλαζεν. To crown all, it maintained a sort of general supervision over the measures of the popular assembly, and took care that they should be in accordance with the existing laws. 63. It may easily be imagined that such privileges as these, however justly or moderately exercised, were found to be incompatible with the increasing preponderance of the democratic element. Pericles and the other orators, whose influence depended on their being able to sway the people by the mere force of eloquence, soon discovered an insuperable barrier to their ambitious schemes in the Areopagus. They would willingly have abolished it altogether. 64. But the feelings of veneration with which the citizens still continued to regard it, almost in spite of themselves, rendered this impossible.

the people.

“It was invested,” says Grote (vol. v. p. 481), “with a kind of religious respect, and believed to possess mysterious traditions emanating from a divine source; especially, the cognizance it took of intentional homicide, was a part of the old Attic religion not less than of judicature.” In short, the Athenians generally would speak of it in terms similar to those employed by Æschines (in Ctes. 9),—Τὴν σκυθρωπὸν καὶ τῶν μεγίστων κυρίαν βουλὴν.

65. Nevertheless, though the popular leaders dared not direct their attacks against the actual existence of the Areopagus, they determined to abridge its authority. Ephialtes, a partisan of Pericles, and, according to Plutarch, equal to him in probity, at length succeeded in carrying a decree, which (as Aristotle informs us, Pol. ii. 9,) “mutilated” the powers of the Areopagus,—τὴν μὲν ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ βουλὴν Ἐφιάλτης ἐκόλουσε καὶ Περικλῆς: and thus are we brought to the question which it will be the main object of this chapter to discuss: viz.—Against which part of its authority was the decree of Ephialtes directed: the Judicial, or the Senatorial?

Meier's and
opinion.

66. The first critic who pronounced a decided opinion on this contested subject was, as we have already stated, Meier. He considered that the Areopagus was deprived not only of its functions as a Senate, but also of its whole jurisdiction in cases of wilful murder; and that its full rights were not restored until the expulsion of the Thirty Tyrants, more than 50 years afterwards.

67. His opinion was followed by Boeckh, in the preface to his Index Lectionum, 1826-27; and finally adopted by Müller; who makes it the groundwork of his theory concerning the political intentions of Æschylus in the Eumenides. It is with Müller theory examined.

that we have chiefly to deal; and since he quotes the principal arguments of Meier and Boeckh in support of his proposition, we cannot do better than examine them separately, and in juxtaposition with the evidence that other writers have collected for their refutation.

68. "In the first place," says Müller (Dissert. p. 113), "cases of homicide (δικαὶ φονικαί) formed the most important part of the Areopagus's jurisdiction, nearly the whole of which, according to Plutarch, it lost at that conjuncture; and this, moreover, was what gave its members (especially in times of civil commotions and riots) considerable political authority,—the very thing of which Ephialtes wanted to deprive it." Now, the passage in Plutarch to which he alludes is as follows:—

Ὡς δὲ πάλιν ἐπὶ στρατείαν ἐξέπλευσε (Κίμων) τελέως ἀνεθύντες οἱ πολλοὶ καὶ συγχέαντες τὸν καθεστῶτα τῆς πολιτείας κόσμον, τὰ πάτρια νόμιμα οἷς ἐχρῶντο πρότερον, Ἐφιάλτου προεστῶτος, ἀφείλοντο τῆς ἐξ Ἀρείου πάγου βουλῆς τὰς κρίσεις πλὴν ὀλίγων ἀπίσας. (Plut. Vit. Cim. cap. xv.)

69. "The word κρίσεις," says Forchhammer in his able treatise,¹ page 15, "cannot be taken in the above passage as applying to any but the senatorial decisions of the Areopagus, since causes which were settled by it in the judicial character were invariably called δικάι: as in such expressions as δικάζειν τὴν βουλήν τὴν ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ φόνου. The fact of Plutarch's using the word κρίσεις in this place, proves at least that judicial causes were not the only ones of which Ephialtes sought to deprive the court; and the additional words, πλὴν ὀλίγων ἀπίσας, implying that certain cases were excepted, may (cæteris paribus) be as reasonably referred to cases of homicide as to any other." The same writer proceeds to quote several passages in Plutarch of a like import, in all of which he considers the word Βουλῆ as pointing to the senatorial power; but these arguments are not conclusive, because the Areopagus, either as Court or Senate, had no other name than Βουλῆ: it was scarcely ever called δικαστήριον.

70. It is difficult to conceive how "its position as a court for trying homicide, gave the Areopagus considerable political authority." Trying prisoners for murder, however solemn and imposing a ceremonial, has nothing to do with politics. Let us hear what Bishop Thirlwall says on this point, (vol. iii. p. 24,)—"Pericles and his partisans could have had no object in attacking that part of the criminal jurisdiction, which was at once the most venerable, the most rarely exercised, and the least liable to abuse. For it does not appear that hitherto the spirit of party had become so furious at Athens, as to resort to assassination; though we shall meet with a remarkable instance of such an excess not long after." Since, then, the popular leaders could not apprehend being subjected to the penal authority of the court as murderers, what can be more improbable than that they should attack this part of its jurisdiction,—the part in which they would meet with the strongest opposition from the people,—the only one, in short, of all its powers, which was not likely to pre-justice their interests?

Müller's
 Second Argument.

71. We come now to Müller's second argument. "In the next place," he says, in p. 113, "it was scarcely possible to sever a portion only from that jurisdiction, (i.e. homicide,) because whatever could be detached from it had already been transferred to other courts, namely those of the Ephetæ; at the same time, it is very likely that certain actions for impiety (ἀσέβεια), which also came under the cognizance of the Areopagus, and were of a more limited and definite nature, were left to its decision." We fully agree with Müller, "that it was scarcely possible to sever a portion only from the homicidal jurisdiction," and for that very reason it appears doubly probable that this jurisdiction was not attacked at all, but preserved to the Court in its full extent; because, as we have seen, it was the part least injurious to, and most impregnable against, the rapid advances of democracy.

72. At the same time, it seems very unlikely that actions for impiety, which belonged to the senatorial authority of the Areopagus, were still left to its decision. Thirlwall's opinion is in direct opposition to this idea. "There was nothing," he says, in the same chapter, "which Pericles and his friends had more cause to fear (as the event proved) than a charge of impiety, which now came under the cognizance of the Areopagus, but at a later period in the life of Pericles, seems to have been no longer subject to it." An opinion which may at least be accounted as valuable per se, as that of Müller.

73. The third argument, which is rather hastily despatched by Müller, but which forms the very basis and stronghold of Meier and Boeckh's theory, is taken from the following passage of Lysias, De Cæde Eratosth. c. 30:—Τῷ δικαστηρίῳ τῷ ἐξ Ἀρείου πάγου, ᾧ καὶ πατέριόν ἐστι καὶ ἐφ' ὑμῶν ἀποδέδοται τοῦ φόνου τὰς δίκας δικάζειν, διαρρήδην εἴρηται τοῦτον μὴ καταγνώσκειν φόνου. Judging from a primâ facie view of this passage, one would certainly understand with Müller "that in the time of the Judges to whom Lysias's oration was addressed, the Areopagus was reinstated in its hereditary right of decision in cases of homicide, and that it was still in possession of the privilege." The words ἐφ' ὑμῶν can certainly bear no other meaning than "in your time." But neither Müller nor Boeckh tells us that these very two words, on which the whole argument rests, are an emendation of Taylor's for the MS. reading ἐφ' ὑμῖν, and adopted without remark by Bekker. 74. We shall not stop to inquire whether the words ἐφ' ὑμῖν ἀποδέδοται will bear the interpretation given them by Forchhammer (p. 24): "Arcopago,—cui et patrium est, et vobis traditum, (i. e. a quo ad vos translatum est,) de cæde judicare—expressis verbis imperatum est," &c. The reader should examine the passages he quotes in illustration of this meaning of ἀποδέδοται and ἐφ' ὑμῖν, and judge for himself. But even assuming the emendation ἐφ' ὑμῶν, "in your time," to be correct, it certainly does not prove, as Meier and Boeckh suppose, that Ephialtes took away the cognizance of homicide from the Areopagus, and that it was only restored to them after the expulsion of the Thirty Tyrants.

Disproved
by Grote (vol. v.
p. 495, note).

75. Mr. Grote argues this point with very conclusive effect:—"This restoration of functions to the Areopagus, refers naturally to the restored democracy after the violent interruption occasioned by the Thirty. Considering how many persons the Thirty caused to be put to death arbitrarily, and how complete a subversion of all laws they introduced, the Areopagus could not have held its sittings, nor tried cases of wilful murder under them. 76. Were the supposition of Boeckh true, and the Areopagus lost its jurisdiction in cases of homicide also, for the fifty-five years that elapsed between the decree of Ephialtes and the expulsion of the Thirty, it must have had no functions at all during that long interval, and for all practical purposes might have been considered as non-existent. Had that been the case, the citizens would have lost all respect for it, as an obsolete power; (but Lysias (Cæd. Erat. c. ii. p. 126) expressly tells us that they did respect it, just before the establishment of the Thirty;) nor would it have been revived after their expulsion. Whereas, if we suppose that it preserved its authority as a tribunal for murder during the above-mentioned period, without those extended privileges which had made it so obnoxious, we shall readily understand how the ancient traditional respect for it was kept alive, and how it came to be revived after the fall of the Thirty, as a venerable part of the old Democracy."

Müller's own theory.

77. Müller then proceeds to use his own theory about the objects of the Eumenides, as an argument on the same side. "Lastly," he says, "(and this is evidence quite as conclusive and convincing as any historical datum,) it is palpably the design of Æschylus to support the Areopagus in its authority in actions for bloodshed. Consequently, it must have been in this quarter that its rights were attacked." 78. To maintain this inference he finds it necessary to alter the chronology, and tells us that Ephialtes' motion was not carried until after the representation of the Eumenides, viz. in Olymp. 80, 3; whereas Diodorus, xi. 77, expressly informs us that it was carried in the year but one before the Eumenides was acted, viz. in Olymp. 80, 1. There is no evidence sufficient to contradict this statement, nor are we justified in departing from Diodorus' chronology.

Chronological difficulty.

79. But independently of this, there is nothing in Æschylus to prove that "it was in this quarter the rights of the Areopagus were attacked." On the contrary, he everywhere seems to take it for granted that these rights were in perfect safety, and not likely to be disturbed. Had they been in danger, he would have mentioned the fact very explicitly. Wherefore Hermann (Opusc. vol. vi. p. 136) argues that the total silence of Æschylus on this point proves that the penal judicature was not attacked;—exactly the reverse of Müller's deduction. On the other hand, Pallas clearly alludes to the withdrawal of other rights, viz. the senatorial, in the significant lines addressed to the Athenian people, Eum. 666—676.

opinion.

80. "All that we can safely infer from the very indistinct allusions in the Eumenides of Æschylus," says Mr. Grote, "is that he himself was full of reverence for the Areopagus, and that the season was one in which party bitterness ran so high as to render civil war (ἐμφύλιον ἄρη, Eum. v. 864) a result to be dreaded by the moderate citizens. Probably he may have been averse to the diminution of privileges carried by Ephialtes; but even this is not quite certain, for he puts forward the Areopagus prominently and specially as a tribunal for homicide, exercising this jurisdiction by inherent prescription, and confirmed in it by the Eumenides themselves. Now, when we consider that this was precisely the power which Ephialtes left untouched, we may plausibly argue that Æschylus, by enhancing the solemnity and predicting the perpetuity of the remaining privilege, intended to conciliate those who resented the recent innovations, and to soften the hatred of the opposite factions." (Vol. v. p. 495, note.)

of Æschylus.

81. That this view of Mr. Grote's with regard to the real political objects of Æschylus is correct, is further confirmed by the high Argive Alliance, Olymp.

80, 2.

terms in which the Argive Alliance is spoken of, Eum. vv. 280 and 734, sqq. Had the poet intended to make a decisive stand against Ephialtes and his party,—had it been his object to excite the popular feeling against them by the Eumenides,—he never would have eulogised this alliance so openly and entirely; for it was the very point on which Cimon and the oligarchs were most at issue with Pericles and the advocates of democracy. 82. As a moderate man, we may suppose that Æschylus desired rather to reconcile the opposite factions, and, consequently, he acquiesces cheerfully in this newly-made treaty with the Argives, knowing that it had been entered into in conformity with the wishes of the citizens in general, and could not now be retracted. He might moreover have no reason to suppose it likely to prejudice the real interests of Athens, tending, as it necessarily would, to increase and consolidate her maritime power.

Conclusion.

83. Thus we have examined, step by step, the erroneous theory of Boeckh, Meier, and Müller, concerning the Areopagus. But if any doubt still remains in the reader's mind, there is a passage in Demosthenes (cont. Aristocr. p. 741, 28), which we have reserved as the finishing argument in this disputed question: Τοῦτο μόνον τὸ δικαστήριον (τὸ ἐν Ἀρείῳ πάγῳ) οὐχὶ τύραννος, οὐκ ὀλιγαρχία, οὐ δημοκρατία τὰς φονικὰς δίκας ἀφελέσθαι τετόλμηκεν. It is in vain that Boeckh and Schoemann endeavour to explain this away as a mere oratorical exaggeration: it is an explicit statement of a fact which must have been well known to all the Athenians at the time, and had it been untrue, every one of Demosthenes' audience could have easily contradicted him. Nothing could ever set aside the distinct and positive proof which this passage contains, were volumes to be written on the opposite side: and with it we shall conclude this chapter, trusting that so prolonged a discussion has not exhausted the reader's patience.

1. πρωτον μὲν apodosin habet in ἔπειτα, v. 29. "Primum, inquit, precor obtestorque Deos Delphicos ut faveant mihi adytum ingressuræ: deinde ingredior." (Paley.)

Id. πρεσβεύω θεῶν, "I give precedence amongst Gods."

5. θελούσης, scil. Θέμιδος.—πρὸς βίαν τινός. Æschylus probably alludes to the account given by Pindar, who makes Earth contend fiercely with Apollo for the oracular seat (see Schol. on Eum. 2). Euripides seems to follow this myth, Iph. Taur. 1234 σιγ.

7. ἣ, femin. from ὄς, ille. (Paley.)—Hermann after Porson, reads δίδωσιν ἣ.

—γενέθλιον δόσιν. On the tenth day after a child's birth, when it was named, the festival called ἀμφιδρόμια was held, and the relations brought presents (ἀπτήρια). Serv. on Ter. Phorm. init.

9. χοιράδα, properly a crag shaped like a hog's back, from χοῖρος: so ραχία, "a precipitous shore," from ράχης, in Prom. V. 738. Comp. Eur. Troad. 89, and Virg. Æn. "Dorsum immane mari summo."

10. ναυπόρους. Transl. "the ship-harbouring shores of Pallas," i.e. the shores near Athens which ships pass through to the harbours of Piræus, Phalerum, &c.

11. Παρηησοῦ, the Ionic form. Dobree, Adv. ii. 175.

13. παῖδες Ἐφαιίστου: the Athenians generally; as descended from Erichthonius, son of Hephaestus and Athena, according to one legend: and particularly, all clever artisans. On some copper coins of Athens is found the head of Hephaestus, with hammer, tongs, &c.

16. πρυμνήτης ἄναξ. Comp. Shakspere, Henry VI. Part ii. act 2, scene 3, "God and king Henry govern England's helm:" where "realm" is wrongly read.

17. κτίσας = ποιήσας, as v. 684, μηδ' ἀκαρπώτους κτίσαι.

21. προναία "causam indicat quare Pallas post Apollinem commemoratur." (Scholefield.) Herodotus, i. 92, mentions this temple of Athene προναία at Delphi. The name πρόνοια is of later origin. It may be doubted whether this line is not the quotation of some Scholiast which has crept into the text. — ἐν λόγοις, "in my subsequent address," opposed in a manner to ἐν εὐχαῖς, v. 20. Comp. Choeph. 631, κακῶν δὲ πρεσβεύεται τὸ Λήμιον λόγῳ. Herm. reads εὐλόγως, unnecessarily.

24. οὐδ' ἀμνημονῶ, scil. αὐτοῦ ἐν λόγοις, "I do not forget to address him."

25. ἐστρατήγησεν = στρατηγὸς ἦν.

27. Comp. Apoll. Rhod. ii. 71. Κωρύκεια νύμφαι Πλειστοῖο θύγατραι.— Ποσειδῶνος, who was lord of Delphi μέσφα Καλαυρείης ἦλθεν ἐς ἀντίδοσι, Callim. in Schol.

31. πάρα for πάρεσιν. See Eurip. Med. 441, σοὶ δ' οὔτε πατὴρ δῶμοι—πάρα. Arist. Acharn. 862.

33. μαντεύομαι γάρ. The connexion with v. 32 is, "Apollo declares by the lots in what order he wishes the different envoys to consult him—and in that order alone can I prophesy." Comp. Numbers xxii. 38.

36. στάσιν. There is no necessity to change this (the MSS. reading) to βάσιν. "To keep my posture erect," is surely as appropriate an expression as "my footstaps." ἀκταίνω, v. Ruhnke on Timæus, p. 21.

37. τρέχω χερσίν, "I run by the help of my hands," i. e. by catching at whatever gives support.

38. οὐδέν, "is naught, good for nothing—a cipher." Comp. Suppl. 720, γυνὴ μονωθεῖσ' οὐδέν· οὐκ ἔνεστ' Ἄρης—μὲν οὖν = immo vero—"Nay, she is like a child in strength rather than a woman." Jelf, Gr. Gr. 550 h, wrongly connects οὐδέν δείσασα.

41. προστρόπαιον, see Introd. § 22.

42. νεοσπαδὲς ξίφος. This tallies exactly with the last scene of the Choe-phorm; Orestes is supposed to have betaken himself to his place of refuge so quickly, as not to have yet relinquished his weapon.

44. λήνει (laná), "a woollen fillet." —μεγίστῳ. The commentators rightly object to the tameness of this epithet. Linwood ingeniously remarks that the next line (τῆδε γὰρ τρανώς ἔρω) is a kind of apology for the Priestess dwelling ἀργῆτι μαλλῶ· τῆδε γὰρ τρανώς ἐρῶ. 45 πρόσθεν δὲ τάνδρὸς τοῦδε θαυμαστὸς λόχος εὔδει γυναικῶν ἐν θρόνοισιν ἡμενος.

 οὔτοι γυναικάς, ἀλλὰ Γοργόνας λέγω· οὐδ' αὖτε Γοργείοισιν εἰκάσω τύποις· εἶδόν ποτ' ἤδη Φινέως γεγραμμένας 50
 δεῖπνον φερούσας· ἄπτεροί γε μὴν ἰδεῖν αὐται, μέλαιναί δ' ἐς τὸ πᾶν βδελύκτροποι· ῥέγκουσι δ' οὐ πλαστοῖσι φυσιάμασιν· ἐκ δ' ὀμμάτων λείβουσι δυσφιλῆ λίβα· καὶ κόσμος οὔτε πρὸς θεῶν ἀγάλματα 55
 φέρειν δίκαιος, οὔτ' ἐς ἀνθρώπων στέγας.
 τὸ φύλον οὐκ ὄπωπα τῆσδ' ὀμιλίας, οὐδ' ἦτις αἶα τοῦτ' ἐπεύχεται γένος

so particularly on the size of the fillet. But it is scarcely probable that Æschylus wrote μεγίστη. The old emendation, λήνει μὲν οἶδς, does not help us; nor is Hermann's strange compound, μεγιστοσοφρόνως, justified by μεγιστότιμος in Suppl. 679. I would suggest to the reader λήνει μὲν ἐς τὸ σῶφρον ἐξεστειμένον.

45. τῆδε—ἐρῶ. "For on this point I can speak clearly." She has no doubt about the suppliant, but as to what creatures those may be who are sleeping round him, she is at fault. ἐρῶ, "I can speak, I am in a condition to speak:" the future seems occasionally to have this potential sense, as εἰκάσω, v. 49, "I can liken them."

49. Comp. Prom. V. 799, Choeph. 1045.

50. εἶδόν—γεγραμμένας. This was, probably, some well-known picture at Athens. Of course it was unnecessary to mention the Ἀρπυιαι by name, as the audience would instantly recognise the allusion in Φινέως δεῖπνον.—Comp. Milton's "Happy-footed Furies."

51. φερούσας, "plundering," as in ἄγω καὶ φέρω.—ἄπτεροι, they are πτεροφόροι in Eurip. Orest. 311.—γε μὴν = "tamen." The ellipse is καὶ τοιαῦτα γ' εἰσὶν αἶδε· ἄπτεροί γε μὴν, "and such would these be, were it not that," &c.

53. οὐ πλαστοῖσι, "unapproachable" on account of the virus. Elmsl. on Med. 149 says this word should be written πλατὸς, (as in πλάτις, uxor.) But surely πελαστὸς, πλαστὸς, may come from πελάζω, as θαυμαστὸς from θαυμάζω, στεγαστὸς, ἀσφάδατος, &c. Comp. Blomf. on Pr. V. 741.

54. λίβα, scil. αἵματος: comp. Choeph. 1055, καὶ ὀμμάτων στάζουσιν αἷμα δυσφιλέε.

57. τὸ φύλον—πόνων. "I have not discovered the tribe to which this company belongs; nor what land can aver, that nurturing such a brood with impunity, it is not subsequently brought to mourn its disasters." πόνων as Prom.

τρέφουσ' ἀνατὶ μὴ μεταστένειν πόνων

 ὕπνω πεσοῦσαι δ' αἰ κατάπτυστοι κόραι,

V. 405, στένω σε τὰς οὐλομένας τύχας. Comp. Eur. Hec. 1256, Jelf, Gr. Gr. § 488, for the construction. Herm. and Pal. read πόνον, "to repent of its pains;" but the sense is much the same.

59. ἀνατί. The following rules respecting Adverbs derived from the Dative Sing. of Nouns may be deduced from Blomfield's Gloss. on Pr. V. 216.

1. When the dative ends in η, α, or ει, the adverbial termination is ει.

Examples: αὐτοβοεῖ from βοῆ (written βοεῖ before the invention of the letters η and ω), αἰτοσεῖ from ἔτει, παμπληθεῖ, &c.

2. When the dative ends in φ, the adverbial termination is ι.

Examples: ἀνατὸς, ἀνατῷ (ἀνατοῦ), ἀνατί· παρομιλι, &c.

All these Adverbs were, in fact, originally Datives, and should be translated with a dative sign; as παρδημι, "with all the people;" ἀνατί, "with impunity," &c. The old termination οἰ is retained in some instances, all of them substantives, οἴκοι, πέδοι, ἄρμοι, Ἰνδοί. (For ἄρμοι, dat. from ἄρμος, "junctura," is literally "at the juncture," when the past time joins the present—i. e. "just now, lately.") Ἰνδοί comes from an old nom. Ἰνδον—"the interior." In the case of adjectives, the ο is invariably dropt, and thus the termination becomes ι.

63. τοῖσιν ἄλλοις. "Ergo ἐαυτῷ etiam." Pal.

64. διὰ τέλους· Hesych. διὰ παντός:—penitus, "throughout." *

65. καὶ πρόσω γ' Blomf. for καὶ πρόσω δ'. "Conjunctiones istas (καὶ—δὲ) in eodem sententiæ membro haud credo occurrere apud istius ævi scriptores nisi per librariorum errorem." Porson on Eur. Orest. 614. Comp. Blomf. Not. Pr. V. 1018. We might read πρόσωβ' here with Wakefield. See note on v. 257. Paley retains καὶ πρόσω δ'.

68. πεσοῦσαι, nomin. pendens, as vv. 95, 100, 455. It appears to be an instance of that species of Anacoluthon, not uncommon in Thucydides, where the writer begins a sentence with one construction, and then diverges into parenthetical clauses; so that he forgets or finds it inconvenient to return.

Νυκτὸς παλαιαὶ παῖδες, αἷς οὐ μίγνυται θεῶν τις, οὐδ' ἄνθρωπος, οὐδὲ θήρ ποτε· 70 κακῶν δ' ἕκατι κἀγένοντ'· ἐπεὶ κακὸν σκότον νέμονται, Τάρταρόν θ' ὑπὸ χθονός, μισήματ' ἀνδρῶν καὶ θεῶν Ὀλυμπίων.
 ὄμως δὲ φεῦγε, μηδὲ μαλθακὸς γένη· ἐλῶσι γάρ σε καὶ δι' ἠπείρου μακρᾶς, 75
 βιβῶντ' ἂν αἰεὶ τὴν πλανοστιβῆ χθόνα, ὑπὲρ τε πόντον, καὶ περιρρύτας πόλεις.
 καὶ μὴ πρόκαμνε· τόνδε βουκολούμενος πόνον· μολὼν δὲ Παλλάδος ποτὶ πτόλιν, ἵζου παλαιὸν ἄγκαθεν λαβὼν βρέτας· 80
 κἀκεῖ δικαστὰς τῶνδε καὶ θελκτηρίου μύθους ἔχοντες, μηχανὰς εὐρήσομεν, ὥστ' ἐς τὸ πᾶν σε τῶνδ' ἀπαλλάξαι πόνων·
 καὶ γὰρ κτανεῖν σ' ἔπεισα μητρῴων δέμας.

Here Æsch., after the first line, falls into a description of the Furies, which extends itself so far that he cannot return to his original construction.

69. Νυκτὸς, Valck., who rightly considers γραῖαι a gloss.

72. Τάρταρόν θ' — τε expegetie — “namely Tartarus.”

75. καὶ = “etiam.” Pal.

76. βιβῶντ' ἂν αἰεὶ. This is the MSS. reading (except βιβῶντ' for βειβῶντ'), and I certainly think it better than Hermann's βειβῶντ' ἂν αἰεὶ τὴν πλ., making ἀνὰ a preposition, separated from its case: or than Paley's ἀνατι, which is tame and unnatural. ἂν with the present partic. gives the sense of “ready, likely to.” Here ἐλῶσι σε βιβῶντ' ἂν = βιβαίης ἂν, εἰ σ' ἐλαύνοιεν. Comp. Soph. Œd. Col. 761, εἰ πάντα τολμῶν κἀπὸ παντὸς ἂν φέρων Λόγου δικαίου μηχανήμα ποικίλον. Here ἂν φέρων = ὅς φέροις ἂν, “who are likely to take.” See for other examples Matth. Gr. Gr. § 598 b.

77. πόλεις—“islands:” for the sea is to an island what its walls are to a city. Ion, 1583, Κυκλάδας νησιαίας πόλεις.

78. βουκολούμενος, literally “grazing on,” as αἰπολούμεναι, v. 187: hence “brooding over.” See Peile on Agam. 650, ἐβουκολοῦμεν φροντίσιν νέον πάθος: and comp. Theoc. Id. xi. 80. In these passages the notion of “soothing” is prominent. So Shakesp. As you like it, iv. 3, “Cheering the food of sweet and bitter fancy.”

79. ποτὶ πτόλιν, a Homeric form.

84. ἔπεισα. The stress falls on this word, as Linwood rightly observes, otherwise we should expect ἐγώ. Trans-

ΟΡΕΣΤΗΣ.

ἄναξ Ἄπολλον, οἶσθα μὲν τὸ μὴ ἴδικεῖν· 85

 ἐγὼ δ' ὑφ' ὑμῶν ὧδ' ἀπητιμασμένη . 95
 ἄλλοισιν ἐν νεκροῖσιν, ὡς μὲν ἔκτανον

late, "Non per te ipsum, sed alio (me) suadente interfecisti matrem."

85, 86. The sense of these lines is, "Since you know what justice is, exercise it in my case without any neglect or remissness: for your power is competent to serve me."—Join ποιεῖν εἶδ.

90. ἐπώνυμος, "true to your name," opposite to ψευδώνυμος. Sept. c. Th. 8, Ζεὺς ἀλεξήτριος Ἐπώνυμος γένοιτο. Choeph. 288, μήτηρ οὐδαμῶς ἐπώνυμον φρένημα πεκαμένη, "whose temper is inconsistent with the name of Mother."

92. ἐκνόμων, Herm., for the MSS. ἐκνόμων. He says ἐκνόμων = παρανόμων, and therefore = ἰκετῶν (comp. προστρόπαιος): "Zeus hath respect to the sanctity of the outlaw, sped on to mortals by the escort of fair fortune." But I doubt whether we should not read ἔννομον: it is more natural to refer σέβας to the Protector Hermes, than to the protected ἰκέται, as the next line, 93, clearly points to Hermes' office: "Zeus respects this lawful privilege of thine, proceeding to mortals with the blessing of good speed."

95. ἐγὼ—ἀπητιμασμένη. This is not exactly a nomin. pendens. For the words ὡς μὲν ἔκτανον το ἐκλείπεται are partly parenthetical; and the apod. αἰσχροῦς ἀλώμαι applies equally to both the other two clauses of the sentence. Translate, "In this wise am I utterly neglected by you; whilst amongst the rest of the Departed—that I was a murderess is a reproach that forsakes me not even in the grave—for in disgrace do I wander." The word δὲ serves to connect the parenth. with the main sentence.

ὄνειδος ἐν φθιτοῖσιν οὐκ ἐκλείπεται, αἰσχροῦς δ' ἀλώμαι· προὔννεπώ δ' ὑμῖν, ὅτι ἔχω μεγίστην αἰτίαν κείνων ὑπο· παθοῦσα δ' οὕτω δεινὰ πρὸς τῶν φιλτάτων, 100
 οὐδεὶς ὑπέρ μου δαιμόνων μνηΐεται, κατασφαγεΐσης πρὸς χερῶν μητροκτόνων.
 ὄρα δὲ πληγὰς τάσδε καρδία σέθεν.
 εὔδουσα γὰρ φρήν ὄμμασιν λαμπρύνεται· ἐν ἡμέρᾳ δὲ μοῖρ' ἀπροσκόπος βροτῶν. 105
 ἢ πολλὰ μὲν δὴ τῶν ἐμῶν ἐλείξατε· χοάς τ' αἰίνους, νηφάλια μειλίγματα, καὶ νυκτίσεμνα δεῖπν' ἐπ' ἐσχάρα πυρὸς ἔθνον, ὄραν οὐδενὸς κοινήν θεῶν.
 καὶ πάντα ταῦτα λάξ ὀρῶ πατούμενα· 110
 ὁ δ' ἐξαλύξας οἴχεται νεβροῦ δίκην,

100. παθοῦσα—μνηΐεται. This Anacoluthon was probably occasioned by the fact, that there was no single verb which Æschylus could make agree with ἐγὼ παθοῦσα expressing, "I am not avenged by the wrath of any Deity;" he was therefore obliged to change the construction.

103. The common way of reading this line is, ὄρα δὲ πληγὰς τάσδε καρδίας σέθεν. "Be conscious of these reproaches with which I sting your heart." But πληγὰς καρδίας will scarcely bear this sense. It is better to suppose that Clytemnestra points to her own still gaping wounds. I have adopted Pauw's reading, ὄρα—καρδία σέθεν, which harmonizes better with the following verses, "Your hearts, I know, see these wounds of mine, for in sleep the mind's eye brightens; in daylight 'tis not the province of mortals to foresee."—Vv. 104, 105, convey a general statement.

105. ἀπροσκόπος, active; ἀπρόσκοπος, pass. "Destiny is unforeseen of mortals;" the sense is unaltered. Comp. Choeph. 285, λαμπρὸν ἐν σκότῳ νωμῶντ' ὄφρην, and Shelley, Marianne's Dream :

"A pale dream came to a lady fair,
 And said, A boon, a boon, I pray!
 I know the secrets of the air,
 And things are lost in the glare of day
 Which I can make the sleeping see,
 If they will put their trust in me."

106. τῶν ἐμῶν—sub. δωρεῶν or θυσιῶν.

107. νηφάλια (νήφω), prop. "sober, abstemious," hence "pure, unmixed with wine." See Introduct. § 46.

109. ὄραν, "Insolentior Accusativus," Paley := καθ' ὄραν. So Acharn. 23, ἀωρίαν ἤκοντες = κατ' ἀωρίαν. Comp. Elmsley on Bacch. 722.

112 καὶ ταῦτα, Lat. "idque"—("and that too" liter.); hence, "Aye, he hath bounded even from the very centre of the toils," &c.

113. The proper sense of ἴλλος is "squinting:" ἐγκατιλλώψας = χλευάσας; what Shakspeare calls "contemning with mowes," Cymbel. i. 7.

114. ἀκούσαθ' ὡς—ψυχῆς. Translate, "Hear how I have pleaded to you as if for my life." "Respicitur notissima locutio περὶ ψυχῆς ἀγών," Paley. Comp. Phœn. 1333; Orest. 847. "De capitali meo periculo loquor," Herm.

115. φρονήσατε, "Recipite mentes," i.e. "Be yourselves," as φρονούσα, v. 941, is "Restored to your senses."

116. ὄναρ. Not the nomin., which is more usual in Homer than Attic writers; but = κατ' ὄναρ, "in a dream:"

a sort of adverbial usage: ὕπαρ is often found thus, and ὄναρ καὶ ὕπαρ, "sleeping and waking." Observe that the κατὰ is never expressed. Comp. v. 126.

118. φίλοις γὰρ—προσίκτορες. Herm. reads φίλοις γὰρ εἰσιν, οὐκ ἐμοί, προσίκτορες: "my relations (i.e. Orestes) have found protectors; I have not." If the MS. reading be retained, translate, "There are patrons to harbour those who have now become dear to their patrons, no longer dear (as by birth Orestes naturally was) to me." φίλος = "dear-ling, darling." The plurals are used because the matter is darkly hinted at, not openly expressed, as in Choeph. 35.—προσίκτωρ applied to the protecting God, as ἀφίκτωρ, Suppl. 1, ἴκτωρ, 479, applied to the suppliant, Eum. 433. The word προστρέπαιος has the same double sense.

122. τί σοι—κακά; "What have you ever accomplished, except it be to work mischief?" This may be either a reproach in general terms against the Furies' office, or it may mean, "and therefore you should show your talents now, against Orestes." So the Schol. τί οὖν μέλλεις τὸ σὸν ἀνύειν ;

124. ἐξεκήραναν, "sapped," lit. "disheartened," fr. κῆρ.—κύριοι ξυνωμόται, "puissant confederates."

125. φράζου, "take heed." For the reading of this verse, see Intr. § 7, note.

127. μέριμναν πόνου, "his careful toil."

130. ὀνειδέσιν, sub. ἐμοῖς, which is omitted because the next line generalizes the particular case.

131. ἀντίκεντρα, "keen as a scourge," as ἀντίπαις, "weak as a child."

132. τῷ for τοῦτῳ, "against him" (Orestes). Hermann's alterations seem unnecessary here.

135. It is chiefly on this verse that Blomfield founds his strange theory, that the Chorus consisted of only three Furies. (Præfat. ad Persas, p. 20.) But see v. 555.

137. ἰδώμεθ', Anacoluthon after ἀπολακτίσασα. It is not easy to make out the precise meaning of this verse. Schutz applies φοιμίον to the recent Vision: Paley, to the coming Song. May it not have a more extended sense, and mean "this beginning of our labours" generally? "Let us see whether the fore-part of our labour is to fall to the ground," i.e. the chase of Orestes that we have already gone through.

- ΧΟ. ιοῦν, ἰοῦν, πόπαξ. ἐπάθομεν, φίλαι— στρ. α΄.

138. These verses are called κομματικά—not sung by the whole Chorus, but by separate Furies, who come on the stage σποράδην, "dispersedly." Introd. § 7, 9. The metre is chiefly Dochmiac, with Senarii interspersed.

145. καθιππάσω, "trampled down;" as we say, "to ride rough-shod over."

152. μεσολαβεῖ, "grasped midway," and therefore more firmly.

153. λοβὸν, "jecinoris pars ultima—fibra." Blomf. Gloss. Pr. V. 504. Translate, "To my heart, to my liver, penetrates the severe, the too severe torture, inflicted as 'twere by a cruel public executioner, so that I feel it;" the allusion is to the taunts of Clytemnestra. Comp. v. 130.

154. δαίος in Tragedy has two senses: 1, "miserable;" 2, "cruel, hostile." The former is Attic, and always δαίος: the latter generally δήϊος (δῆος, Choeph. 628). Δῆος means "knowing, crafty."

155. ἔχειν not pleonastic, but very emphatic; like the gladiatorial "Habet" τοιαῦτα δρῶσιν οἱ νεώτεροι θεοὶ, ἀντ. β'.

158. The order is, πάρεστι προσδρακεῖν
γᾶς ὀμφαλὸν ἀρόμενον φονολιβῆ θρόμβον περὶ πόδα περὶ κᾶρα, βλοσυρὸν ἄγος, ἔχειν.
 "One may behold Earth's centre to have contracted a stain of dripping, coagulate gore from head to foot, a terrible pollution of murder, which it cannot but retain." βλοσυρός, "torvus," more usually applied to a person.—
ἔχειν does not govern ἄγος, which is in apposition with θρόμβον, but is used as above, "ita ut habeat." Vv. 153, 159, are instances of what is called
 "the Paracatalogo" in Tragedy, on which see Müller, Diss. p. 67: a number of short syllables "extra metrum," uttered καταλογάδην, like prose, and calculated to express strong passion, excitement, anger, &c.

165. φθίσας, not "destroyed," but "having weakened the power of."
 Comp. 697.

166. Here τε and καὶ are not simply copulative, but mean "etsi—tamen." "Me injuria afficit, illum tamen non liberabit," Hermann.

λυπρός, with dat. So λυπρὸς τοῖς ξυμ- μάχοις, Thucyd. i. 76; τοῖς ἐχθροῖς, vi. 18; and in viii. 46 the correct reading must be, καὶ βασιλεῖ ἐξείναι [δεῖ] ἐπὶ τοῖς αὐτῷ
λυπρὸς τοῖς ἐτέροις ἐπάγειν—ποτ' αὐτοῦ.

167. οὐκ ἐλευθεροῦται, "He is not a whit the more set free."

169. μιάστορα = ἀλάστορα, "avenger

of blood," as Suppl. 637. ἐξ ἐμοῦ, Scholef. "after me," for the vulg. ἐκείνου, which violates the metre: ἐστὶν δὲν, Herm. Either alteration makes good sense, but Scholefield is perhaps nearer the MSS.

172. ὄφιν. Probably an arrow is thus called, from the peculiar way in which serpents dart or strike at their object of attack. — πτηνόν. Paley compares ἔγχη πτερωτᾶ, Herc. Fur. 1101; πτερόεντες δίστολ, Hom.; "alis adlarsa sagitta," Virg.—ἀργηστὴν, "flashing," prop. "white, glistening," as ἀργῆς, sup. v. 45.

177, 179. I have adopted the same reading of these lines as Müller and Paley. Transl. "But go ye, where are wrought punishments that sever the head, and dig out the eyes; where are massacres, where the vigour of youth is destroyed by castration; where is mutilation of the extremities and stoning; where impaled victims moan right piteously." Hermann's reading and interpretation is also probable: σπέρματός

τ' ἀποφθοραί, Παίδων τε χλοῦνις, ἡδ' ἀκρωνία κακοῦ—"Abortions, castration of youths, and the acme of evil." The difficulty lies in our ignorance of the true meanings of χλοῦνις and ἀκρωνία; two very different senses being given to each: χλοῦνις is said to be "vis virilis" or "castratio," ἀκρωνία either = ἀκρωτηριασμός or ἀθροισμός. The word χλοῦνις οὖς ἀγχιος (Il. ix. 539) is subject to the same doubt: but surely "vigorous" would be the more natural epithet of a wild boar.—καραμιστῆρες. Comp. Rhes. 817, καραμιστῆς μέρος.—ὀφθαλμωρύχοι. Linwood for ὀφθαλμωρύχοι, the sense being active. The Americans might translate "gouging."—λευσμός, a better reading than λευσμός.

183. στέργηθρα, "appetite, fondness for,"—a rare sense of the word, which usually = φιλτρον. Comp. Choeph. 233, Hippol. 255. Const. οἷας ἐορτῆς στέργηθρ' ἔχουσαι ἐστὲ ἀπόπτυστοι θεοῖς.—ὑφηγεῖται, "suggests (interprets) this taste."

186. The commentators quarrel with the epithet πλησίοισι. But there is no reason why ἐν τοῖσδε πλησίοισι χρηστηρίοις should not mean "in the neighbourhood of this shrine," literally "in this shrine, being near to you." So Hermann: πλησία χρηστήρια, "vicinum templum sunt, ante quod Furie commorantur."

192. δῆ expresses irony and contempt.

194. πέμψαι. So προπομπός, v. 197. It need not be altered to πῶξαι.—τί μῆν; "quidni?"

195. ὑπέστης, sub. εἶναι.—αἵματος, "murderer," abstract for concrete.

200. κόμπασον, "Boast of an honourable privilege—when you have it,"—not of a base occupation, unworthy of Goddesses. So Paley; and this is more probable than to suppose the words simply ironical, "Proclaim this fine privilege of yours."

202, 203. Transl. "What! matricide in the case of a woman who rids herself of her husband?"

Ch. "Aye: for this would not be murder committed on a blood-relation." ἀθέντης, αἰτοσφαγῆς, αὐτοφόνος, αὐτοχείρ, αὐτοκτόνος, either applicable to self-murder or that inflicted by or upon a blood-relation; so αὐτουργίαι, inf. v. 322.

204. The MSS. have ἠρκέσω, "vocem nihili," variously altered to ἠδέσῃ, ἠρκεσεν, ἠρκέσει, &c.; Herm. ἠκέ σοι. But I follow Paley in preferring εἰργάσω, "fecisti" (Wordsworth's conjecture), because it is the only verb which completely agrees with both ἄτιμα and παρ' οὐδέν.

205. Διὸς, scil. τελείου: not in the usual sense of "the Accomplisher," but the God of Marriage: τέλος γὰρ ὁ γάμος (Schol. ad Arist. Thesm. 973). Comp. inf. 799.

208. εὐνή—φρουρουμένη. "For marriage between man and woman, brought about by Destiny, if rightly observed, is more binding than an oath." τῇ δίκη = δίκαιος. μείζον and φρουρουμένη are superfluous alterations.

211. τὸ μὴ γενέσθαι (τίνεσθαι, Herm.). Paley translates this, "So that it does not happen that you visit them wrathfully." This is harsh and improbable. This verse refers to what the Chorus had said in v. 203, οὐκ ἂν γένοιθ' ὕμμιος αὐθέντης φόνον. The expression is therefore elliptical: in full it would be τὸ μὴ γενέσθαι ὕμμιον αὐθέντη φόνον. Transl. "If then to murder, in the case of married folk, you concede that it is no murder, and that you do not visit them wrathfully; I deny the justice of your persecution of Orestes."—χαλᾶς, "yield the point, art indulgent enough to say;" as Hee. 403.

214. πρᾶσσουσιν ἡσυχαιτέραν, "too remiss in exacting vengeance."

215. ἐποπτεύσει, "shall look to, take care of," as Choeph. 1.

217. σὺ δ' οὖν—τίθου. This line is of course ironical.—πλέον τίθου = "Increase," πλέον being an adverb.

220. ἔμπας καὶ ἔμπα Ἀττικῶς, ἔμψης δὲ Ἰωνικῶς· δηλοῖ δὲ τὸ ὅμως, Zonaras. This is a poetic word, derived from ἐν πᾶσι; it does not mean "altogether," but "in all circumstances," i. e. "at all events," and hence "nevertheless." Here it is καὶ χωρὶς τῶν ἐμῶν τιμῶν, "anyhow." In Soph. Aj. 121, it serves to strengthen the force of καίπερ (ἐποικτεῖρω δὲ νιν Δύστηνον ἔμπας, καίπερ ὄντα δυσμενῆ) like the Homeric Νέστορα δ' οὐκ ἔλαθεν, πίνοντά περ ἔμψης. Comp. Antig. 845.

221. δίκας—κάκκυνηγετῶ, "I will proceed to punish this man, and even now I am on his track." μέτειμι δίκας = τιμωρήσω. The double accus. occurs similarly Baech. 346.

225. εἰ προδῶ. Jelf, Gr. Gr. 854. 1, thus explains the difference between εἰ γένοιτο, εἰ γένηται, and ἐὰν γένηται. Εἰ γένοιτο implies a mere supposition, often an improbable one: "If it should happen." εἰ γένηται, that it may or may not happen, without any notion of a definite time, "If it does." ἐὰν γένηται, that it is expected to happen at the particular time "when it does." Instances of εἰ with the subj. occur Pers. 787, Suppl. 86, Ajax 491, Œd. Tyr. 193, 874. Œd. Col. 1443. It is doubtful whether this construction can be used in prose; in Thucyd. vi. 21, εἰ ξυστώσι, the MSS. vary: see Arnold.

226. The scene is shifted to Athens. See Introd. § 13.

228. προστρόπαιον. Introd. § 22.

229. ἀμβλὸν—βροτῶν. Transl. "But already have the edge of my guilt blunted, and worn down by contact with (πρὸς) the dwellings and haunts of other men." προστετριμμένον = "attritum, rubbed against." Comp. Sept. e. Theb. 712, τεθηγμένον τοί μ' οὐκ ἀπαμβλυνεῖς λόγῳ. Wellauer thinks πρὸς is an adverb, = "insuper," as Orest. 621, Med. 704, which is not impossible. Hermann's reading is not satisfactory.

231. ὅμοια = "perinde"—"All the same,—as much as if I had not been σώζων ἐφετμὰς Λοξίου χρηστηρίους, πρόσειμι δῶμα καὶ βρέτας τὸ σὸν, θεά.

 αὐτοῦ φυλάσσω ἀναμενῶ τέλος δίκης.

purified at all." So according to Reiske's emend., Eur. Hec. 398, ἕμοια, κισσὸς δρυὸς ὄπως, τῆσδ' ἔξομαι, where, however, we should perhaps read ὅποια κισσὸς δρυὸς, ἐγὼ τῆσδ' ἔξομαι.

233. πρόσειμι, not from εἶμι, "ibo," but εἶμι, "sum:" for Orestes had already come to the temple of Pallas, comp. ἦκω, v. 227. So πάρειμι, Eur. Bacch. 805.

234. Paley wrongly joins ἀναμένω φυλάσσω, making it = φυλάσσω. Read ἀναμενῶ, and join αὐτοῦ φυλάσσω.

240. πεποιίμανται, "has been traversed," as carefully as by a shepherd seeking out shady nooks where he may find grass for his flock.

241. ἀπτέροις. See v. 51.

243. καταπτακῶν. The second aor. ἔπτακον is only used in compounds of πτήσσω. The verb means prop. "to drop the wings for fear," as a bird; so

Ajax 171, of a dove: hence "to crouch, cover." πτῶσσω is always intrans.—πτήσσω in Il. xiv. 40, is "to scare," but this is unusual.—πτᾶξ and πτᾶξ are used indifferently as to sense.

244. προσγελαῶ, "greet," Pal. compares σαίνω, used "de aliquā re quæ furtim sensibus illabitur:" we may transl. "The smell of human blood lures me on," after Milton, Par. Lost, ii. 665.

245. This is another Commatic Ode, see on v. 138.

245. λεῦστέ τε, Herm. Müller's defence of the MSS. reading, λεύσσετε, is ingenious. He supposes that the Chœreutæ enter in two long lines, and part to the right and left, so that the dual is applied to the two files, as it is in Homer to the two banks of oarsmen in a bireme. But several MSS. plainly indicate that λεύσσε . . . τῶν were separate words, and ὄρα in the former clause confirms this.—πάντα for πάντη.

247. ἀτίτασ, nom. = ἀτιμώρητοσ, Schol. Paley makes it the accus. pl. "us the avengers," quoting Klausen, Agam. 72.

248. ἀλκὰν, "aid," as Suppl. 711.—αἶτε, "No longer as before," Pal.

250. ὑπόδικοσ—χερῶν, "Is willing to take his trial for the works of his hands"—χερῶν lit. "in respect of his hands or handiwork."—Paley's "to place himself in our power," is exactly contrary to the sense: for this was what Orestes wished to avoid, by clasping the statue of Pallas. Hermann's reading χρεῶν, "debts," is somewhat tame.

253. τὸ διερὸν, "the life-blood." Διερός (from διδ) means "penetrabilis." So Arist. Aves, 213, μέλεα διερά = διαπρύσια "thrilling," not = ὑγρά "liquid." Comp. Od. vi. 201, ix. 43. From the same root come διαίωκ, διαίνω, δίομαι, &c.

255. πέλανον. Blomf. Gloss. Pers. 821.

256. φέρομι' ἂν. J. Wordsworth for φεροίμαν.

258. The MSS. have ἀντιποίνουσ τίνεισ ματροφόνασ δύασ, which is variously altered. I have adopted Hermann's reading; "that you may pay the penalty of your mother's disastrous murder," as Pers. 471, ὦν ἀντίποινα παῖσ ἐμὸσ πράξειν δοκῶν. We might also read ματροφόνοουσ δύασ, accus. in apposition with ἀντίποινα—the sense is the same.

260. τιν' ἀσεβῶν. These words spoil the metre, and Paley would omit them. It is doubtful whether ἤλιτεν could govern an accus. of the person injured, though it does in Homer. Comp. Jelf, Gr. Gr. 565. Herm. reads οὐκ εὔσεβῶν, but this also is a doubtful construction: in Agam. 322, the proper reading is εἰ σεβουσι (not εὔσεβοῦσι) τοῖσ θεοῖσ, μέγας γὰρ Αἰδῆς ἐστὶν εὐθυνος βροτῶν

 ἔνερθε χθονὸς,
 δελτογράφῳ δὲ πάντ' ἐπωπᾶ φρενί.

270. βρίζει — χερὸς, "The blood grows drowsy and wan, in respect of my hand."—χερὸς does not depend on any particular word, but on the whole clause as a qualificatory genitive.272. "Junge πρὸς ἐστία θεοῦ ἠλάθη," Pal. Is not the construction rather ἠλάθη καθαρμοῖς χοιροκτ., πρὸς ἐστία θεοῦ, "at or near the altar!" ἠλάθη, "was expelled." See Introd. § 28.

275. ἀβλαβεῖ ξυνουσία, "with harmless intercourse," thereby proving that he is no longer impure. The full construction would be πολλὺς γένοιτ' ἂν λόγος, ὥστε λέγειν ὅσοις, &c. The dat. ὅσοις is substituted for the accus. ὅσους, because ὅσοις προσῆλθον ἀβλαβεῖ ξυνουσία = ὅσοις ἀβλαβῶς ξυνην προσελθών.

280. The first political allusion in the play. Comp. vv. 734 seq., and see Introd. §§ 51, 52.

284. τίθησιν—πόδα. This line means nothing more than "whether she is standing or sitting." Æschylus probably had in his eye two well-known statues of Pallas, one representing her with her left foot straight in advance (as in the Panathenaic vases), the other in a sitting posture with flowing drapery.

287. πρόσωθεν. Paley says the full construction would be θεὸς καὶ πρόσω ὦν κλύει πρόσωθεν, comparing Ion, 585. But πρόσωθεν, lit. "from afar," comes to mean simply "afar off," as ἔγγυθεν is often = ἔγγυς. ἄγκαθεν = ἄνω, Agam. 3.

287. ἔλθοι—ὅπως γένοιτο. The optative is used, because the wish is followed up in the construction by a kind of attraction. "Quum dicit ὅπως γένοιτο, optare se ait ut veniat illa, quo si velit opem ferat," Herm.—Dobree, Adv. ii. 265; Soph. Phil. 325, Ajax, 1220.

291. ὅπου φρενῶν τὸ χαίρειν, "in what corner of the soul joy dwells." Comp. Odys. xi. 94, ἀτερπέα χῶρον; infr. 401; Œd. Col. 1217.

292. δαιμόνων, scil. ἡμῶν. This generalization is quite in character with Æschylus.—σκίαν, Heath, for σκιά. Hermann's reading, τῶνδε δαιμόνων, is languid.

293. ἀποπτύεις = "respuis."

294. τραφεῖς, "saginatius;" καθιερωμένος, "devotus." The line alludes to the δημόσιοι or φαρμακοὶ, criminals slain to atone for the sins of the people: so called qu. δημοσίᾳ τρεφόμενοι. Comp. Mitchell on Arist. Eq. 1099.

296. δέσμιον. So κατάδεσις was a prayer addressed to the Infernal Gods, devoting a person to destruction.

297. ἄγε δὴ. The time of the πάροδος is now come, when the Chorus arrange themselves in proper order with the Anapaestic March. See Introd.

§ 9. After this they sing the First Stasimon, v. 311. The two terms are thus defined by Aristotle, Poet. xii. 7: πάροδος ἢ μὲν πρώτη λέξις ὅλου τοῦ χρόνου, στάσιμον δὲ μέλος χρόνου τὸ ἄνευ ἀναπαύτου καὶ τροχαίου.

302, sqq. I have adopted Hermann's excellent emendations of the text here: not those in the Opusc., but in the recent edition of Aeschylus.

303. προνέμοντας, "exposing, holding forth to the public gaze," opp. to ἐπικρύπτει, "hides, covers as with a cloak."

309. παραγιγνόμεναι, "coming forward in behalf of the dead;" παρὰ in comp. often has the notion of "aiding, being on the side or party of." Comp. παρῆστώς, v. 65, παρακαλέω, &c.

310. αὐτῷ, "in his case."

313. ποιανᾶν, in appros. with ἐμέ, "As a punient (vengeful) power."—ἐλαοῖσι καὶ δεδορκόσι, "to quick and dead." Comp. v. 324.

315. ματρῶον—φόνου: this hypallage is well translated by Paley, "My own peculiar victim to expiate a mother's murder:" comp. v. 294, and for the const. v. 264.

316. The metre is now Pæonic, each verse being composed of two fourth Pæons. So also vv. 235 and 346 seq.—τῷ τεθυμένῳ, “the devoted one,” i.e. Orestes. So Theoc. ii. 3, ὡσ τὸν ἐμοὶ βάρυν ἐντα φίλον καταθύσομαι ἄνδρα, which Wordsworth rightly translates, “ut meum amantem jam crudelium factum, devotum.”

317. τόδε μέλοσ. The wild grandeur of this passage is much increased by the absence of any verb.—παρακοπὰ, “delirium,” παραφορὰ, “distraction.”—φρενοδαλῆσ, Dindorf says this word must be short in the penult. here, though derived from δηλέομαι. Hermann (De Metris, § 451) makes it long: saying of this passage, “ultimus versus (scil. v. 317) quasi logædiciâ quadam ratione terminatur,” (vv. 316-317) and comparing Choeph.

804, τὸ δὲ καλῶσ κτάμενον, ᾧ μέγα ναίων, &c.

319. ἀφόρμικτοσ, not accompanied by the φόρμιγξ, but the αὐλόσ; sung in the Phrygian mode (τόμοσ ὕρβιοσ).—αὐονὰ βροτοῖσ, “a blight upon mortals.”

320. διανταία, “irresistible,” prop. “penetrating all things,” or “all-pervading.”

322. θνατῶν—ἐλεύθεροσ. “In the case of those men, to whom the wilful murder of kindred has been brought home, to dog their steps until the guilty one departs below earth; and even when dead he is not entirely free.”—ξυμπέσσωσιν, subjunct. because τοῖσιν is a relative, as above, ἧτισ ἄνδρα νυσφίση, v. 207.—μάταιοι, “temerè commissum.”—ὑπέλθῃ, sub. τισ.—ἄγαν, “Not over free,” or Scotied, “not that free.”

330. ἀθανάτων, “And it is the Gods’

duty to keep their hands aloof from us." Hermann, on the strength of the Schol. μη πλησιάζειν ἡμᾶς τοῖς θεοῖς, would read ἀθανάτων διχ' ἔχειν γέρας. Unnecessary; for the Schol. will apply either way; and it is desirable to keep the construction ἀθανάτων (ἔστι) corresponding with θεῶν (ἔστι) in Antist. v. 341.

332. ἄκληρος. The first syllable of this word must be scanned as long, and equivalent to the two short syllables in the Antistrophe. Hermann's alterations in this Strophe and Antistrophe are violent and improbable.

335. ὅταν—ἔλη. Transl. "When Violence, being domesticated, hath smitten a member of the family (φίλον).—τιθασὸς = Lat. "cicur."

337. ἐπὶ τὸν διόμεναι = ἐπιδιόμεναι τοῦτον.

338. The words enclosed in brackets are evidently corrupt. They probably crept into the text from some Schol., as ὑφ' αἵματος νέου, = "in consequence of recent murder," is scarcely Greek, and as the metre does not agree with v. 350. It is impossible to correct the text with any certainty: one thing only appears sure, that v. 338, like the preceding, was composed of two fourth Pæons.

340. σπευδομένα—ἐλθεῖν. I have changed the nom. pl. σπευδόμεναι here to the dat. σπευδομένα, and omitted δὲ after θεῶν, for σπευδόμεναι cannot stand with ἐμαῖσι λιταῖς. Transl. "Whilst I hasten to take these onerous duties out of other hands, 'tis the Gods' part to guarantee the non-fulfilment of prayers offered to me: and that they should not even obtain a first hearing." The dative σπευδομένα will thus agree with the ἐμοι contained in ἐμαῖσι λιταῖς. An exactly similar construction occurs in Eurip. Herc. F. 1267: "Ἐπ' ἐν γάλακτι τ' ὄντι γοργαποῦς ὄφεις Ἐπεισέφρησε σπαργάνοισι τοῖς ἐμοῖς Ἡ τοῦ Διὸς ξύλλεκτρος. Comp. also περῶντι, v. 603, inf.—τινὰ the indef. for the def. τοῖς θεοῖς, as often.—τάσδε μερίμνας, scil. τὸ διώκειν τοὺς φονέας, &c.—ἐμαῖσι λιταῖς, a common hypallage; Pers. 698, τὴν ἐμὴν αἰδῶ. Pr. Vinc. 396, θρήνος δύμος. Soph. Ed. R. 959, Col. 332.—Ἀνάκρισις was the preliminary investigation of a case before an Archon or other magistrate, before it came into the public courts. 344. Ζεὺς γ' αἰμοσταγὲς Müller, for the sake of the metre. In the MSS. Ζεὺς γὰρ αἵματοσταγὲς, &c.

344, 345. Transl. "Hath deemed our hateful tribe unworthy of his conversation." The Schol. wrongly applies ἔθνος to τοὺς φονεάς.

349. A monosyllable is wanting in the MSS. after σφαλερὰ. Herm. reads γὰρ—Linw. περ. I think they have misapprehended the sense of σφαλερὰ κῶλα, which does not refer to the fugitives, but to the persecutors, and is in apposition with ἀκμάν. I read καὶ τανυδρόμοις, "My limbs that overthrow even the swiftly running," = ἄπερ σφάλλει καὶ τοὺς τανυδρόμους. For to say that τανυδρόμοι have σφαλερὰ κῶλα, "feeble legs," seems like a contradiction in terms.—δύσφορον ἄταν is in apposition with the whole sentence.

351. ὑπ' αἰθέρι opposite to κατὰ γᾶς. So we should say, "the proudest man under heaven."—μινύθουσι, "dwindle."

353. ἀμετέραις. In full, and without hypallage, this would be ἐπὶ ταῖς ἐφόδοις ἡμῶν μέλανα εἴματα ἐχούσων.

354. ἐπιφθόνοις, Herm. for ἐπιφόνους: transl. either "hated" (pass.), or "mischievous," (act.)

355. τόδ', scil. τὸ πίπτειν, not, as Paley says, τὸ μινύθειν, &c.

356—358. "So pestilent (μύσος = μυσσάρης) a gloom hath spread its wings o'er him; against his family too, report with its many murmurs whispers, that it is under a murky cloud." αὐδᾶται is here used as a deponent verb governing ἀχλὺν, as Choeph. 144, Phil. 852. We may remark that Æschylus expresses by metaphor what we should by simile. We should say, "Rumour, like a murky cloud, speaks against the house." Æsch. says, "Rumour speaks a murky cloud against," &c.

359. μένει γάρ, scil. τάδε. "These things endure," i.e. are established by the eternal laws of Fate—the expression refers to what has just preceded, rather than, as Herm. says, to the following words, "manet—nos esse promptas," &c. He compares Ag. 1530, μίμνει δὲ μίμνοντος Διὸς παθεῖν τὸν ἔρξαντα, but the construction is very different, as in that passage (τὸ) παθεῖν τὸν ἔρξ. is the direct nom. to μίμνει.

363. Paley reads ἀτίεται, to avoid the tautology of ἀτιμ' ἀτίεται, and is possibly right.

365. λάμπα. There is no necessity for Wieseler's correction λάπα, "situ." Transl. "in unsunned darkness." δυσ.

οδοπ. (agreeing with λάχη) "fraught with dangers" (lit. salebrosa) "both to quick and dead;" comp. v. 312, δυσομμάτοις. δὺς in comp. has often the force of a complete negative; so 379, δυσήλιον; 529, δυσπαλεῖ; 789, δύσκηλον.

371. τέλεον δοθέντα = "definitively given me."

372. ἐπι δέ μοι. So all the MSS. read this, and so the Schol. read it, for he says ἐπι δέ μοι ἔπεισι. It is not therefore likely that ἔστι was expressed in the next line, as Pal., Mull. &c., γέρας παλαιόν ἔστιν, οὐδ'. But an Iambus is wanting in v. 373; Herm. now reads ἐπι δέ μοι μένει γέρας, &c. I should prefer γέρας παλαιόν, οὐδὲ νῦν ἀτιμ. κύρω. —ἐπι μοι, "penes me est," "an ancient office is in my hands;" ἀτιμίας κύρω, "Nor can I be disqualified; though I go below the earth to occupy my post in rayless gloom." κύρω, Herm., metri grat., not κυρά.

376. καταφθατουμένη = φθάνουσα κατακτωμένη. "As I forestalled foreign usurpation, by taking possession of the land," "as I was hantselling."—γῆν, scil. Sigeum, where was a temple of Pallas, Herod. v. 95. The usurpation alluded to, was that of the Mitylenaeans, who had long contended with the Athenians for the possession of Sigeum; Æsch. indirectly exhorts his countrymen to regain possession, by the fiction that Pallas had this given her by the Greek leaders. The Schol. tells us that the dispute had been decided in a previous war, by a duel between Phryno an Athenian, and Pittacus a Mitylenæan, in which the latter was victorious.—διώκουσα, as Theb. 366, ροιβδοῦσα, "flapping my concave ægis," sinum Ægidis.

383. Wakefield reads κῶλοις, which Herm. adopts: not needed (see Transl.). Müller supposes from this line that Pallas actually came in a chariot and horses. If so, what would have been the use of her "plying her indefatigable feet, and flapping her ægis"?

384. καὶ νῦν. The old reading is καὶ νῦν δ'. See on v. 75. Herm. adopts Canter's καιρῆν δ'; but καιρός cannot be applied to a person in this sense.—τήνδ' ὀμιλίαν χθονός, an elliptical phrase, used v. 681,—"this company (that has settled in) my land."

388. ὑμᾶς, suppl. λέγω. An unusual change of construction, not sufficiently explained by the commentators, originating probably thus—that in v. 386 λέγω is “to speak to,” and therefore takes the dat. πᾶσι, and τῷδε ξένῳ. But here, when Pallas begins to mention the Furies' appearance, λέγω (understood before ὑμᾶς) is rather to speak of, i. e. describe, and takes an accusative; thus regulating its case by the sense required. So ἐξίσταμαι in Soph. Ajax, 82, governs an accus., and in v. 672 a dative, according to its different senses. Transl. “And you I address as resembling,” &c.

389. οὐτ' ἐν θεαῖσι. So Par. Lost, ix. Satan says to Eve, “Thou who shouldst be seen A Goddess among Gods.”

391. Retain the MS. reading ἄμορφον, and transl. “For his neighbours to speak ill of a person because he is deformed, is far from just,” &c. This resembles the sentiment quoted by C. Lamb from Fuller: “They who ill-treat a deformed child, do break the reed which God hath bruised before.” The phrase acquires a new significance if we remember that καλλίμορφος was an “epitheton solenne” of Athena. It is closely connected with the preceding lines, and in particular with v. 390. ἄμορφον would be tame and common-place.

392. δικαίων for τῆς δίκης, as Agam. 785.

394. αἰανῆς. Herm. on Soph. Ajax 657, derives αἰανός and αἰανῆς from αἰέ. Its first sense is “diuturnus, perpetuus,” as here; second “diuturnitate gravis;” third, generally, “molestus, gravis.” Comp. Blomf. Gloss. Pers. 639.

404. Transl. "Nulliusne alius necessitatis metuens vindictam?" Pal.—Some MSS. have ἄλλης ἀνάγκης; ἢ τίνος τρέων κότον; If we read this, supply ἕνεκα to ἀνάγκης. The sense is not changed materially either way.

405. ὡς here = ὥστε.

406. Transl. "We have two contending parties here: one half only of the argument is set before us," i. e. audiamus alteram partem.

407. θέλει, rightly retained by Paley: δοῦναι θέλει = δοίη ἄν. Transl. "But he neither would accept the oath we proposed to him, nor tender one to us:" alluding to the διωμοσία, a preliminary ceremony in all trials. The plaintiff's oath was called προωμοσία, the defendant's ἀνωμοσία.

411. ἐξέλεγχε in its original sense of "examine the witnesses."—εὐθείαν. The εὐθουδικία was a cause adjudged at once, without the preliminary oaths.

413. The MSS. vary here. Herm. and Paley agree in following the Schol. (ἀπ' ἀξίων οἴσαν γονέων) as to the sense; but Paley's correction, ἀξίαν κάπ' ἀξίων, is more elegant than Hermann's, γ' ἀξίαν γ' ἐπαξίων.

422. μέλημα—"id quod curie est alieni," "a subject of anxiety"—hence "an important matter."—ἀφαιρήσω=ἐκποδῶν λέγω in v. 431; "I will remove from the argument, put out of the question."

424. Person first altered ἐφεζομένη to ἐφημένη; Butler to ἐφημένου, which Herm. and Linw. adopt: τὸ σὸν βρέτας is the nom. to ἔχει. A person's hand could scarcely be said ἐφέζεσθαι τινα, "imponi," as Paley.

427. ἀνδρὸς αἵματος καθαρσίου=ἀνδρὸς οὗ καθαιρεῖ αἷμα.

429. πάλαι—οἴκοισι. Introduct. §§ 29, 30.

433. ἱστορεῖς, "scis." Blomf. Gloss. Pers. 460.

435. "The state of Ilium thou didst unstate."

437. ἀλλὰ explains the οὐ καλῶς, v. 436.

439. This reading of Herimann's, originally given in Opusc. iv. 331, has been objected to by Schoemann, but he successfully defends it in his edit. of Æschylus. The allusion is to Choeph. 1005, μαρτυρεῖ δέ μοι Φᾶρος τούδ', ὡς ἔβαψεν Αἰγίσθου ξίφος. Paley remarks that the imperf. ἐξεμαρτύρει is used, ἀντικτόνοις ποιναῖσι φιλτάτου πατρός.

καὶ μὴ τυχοῦσαι πράγματος νικηφόρου, 455

because the audience had lately seen the Choephoros acted.

444. ἀντίκεντρα. See on v. 130.

445. Join ἐπαίτιους τῶνδε.

447. Transl. "For however I fare at your hands, I will be content." πανταχῇ = utcumque. Paley well compares Antig. 634, ἦ σοὶ μὲν ἡμεῖς πανταχῇ δρῶντες φίλοι, and Herod. ix. 27, πάντη γὰρ τεταγμένοι περήσομεθα εἶναι χρηστοί.—αἰνέσω. See Monk on Alcest. 2.

448. μείζον, "too great," a sense of the comparative not unusual with μέζων and ἐλάσσων.

451—453. ἄλλως—πόλει. This passage as it stood in the MSS. has never been satisfactorily explained by the commentators, because it was impossible to give any sense to the second ὅμως. I have adopted Pauw's emendation ἐμοῖς (though he places it after κατηρτυκῶς, instead of the first ὅμως). Translate: "Especially since you (in spite of your having performed every necessary rite) have nevertheless come, a pure and harmless suppliant, to my temple: I receive you in my city as being now free from blame." κατηρτυκῶς—τελειώσας, Hesych. τέλειος τὴν ἡλικίαν, Schol. Müller rightly explains this word, "one who has duly performed everything, attended to all observances." In Eurip. Æolus (fragment) we have νῦν δ' ἀμβλύς εἰμι, καὶ κατηρτυκῶς πόνων, "But as matters now stand, I am blunted (to the sense of pain) and thoroughly exercised in respect of troubles."

454. μοῖραν οὐκ εὐπέμπελον. Schol. εὐπαραίτητον· δυσάρεστοι φύσει εἰσίν. But I quite agree with Wellauer and Hermann's interp. "Eam habent conditionem, ut non facile dimitti possint." Comp. v. 459.

455. καὶ μὴ τυχοῦσαι. Another instance of the "nom. pendens" so common in Æschylus. He was going to follow up this by some such word as στάζουσιν, but changed the construction.

χώρα μεταῦθις ἰὸς ἐκ φρονημάτων πέδω πεσῶν ἄφερτος αἰανῆς νόσος.
 τοιαῦτα μὲν τάδ' ἐστὶν ἀμφότερα, μένειν

 ὄρκον πορόντας μηδὲν ἔκδικον φράσειν.

ΧΟ. νῦν καταστροφὰὶ νέων στρ. α'.

θεσμίων, εἰ κρατήσῃ δίκαι τε καὶ βλάβαι

456. χώρα—νόσος. Translate, "And in case they do not meet with success, the venom from their hearts falling earthward, becomes an intolerable everlasting plague in future time to this country." Suppl. γίγνεται or ἐστὶ to complete the sentence. Observe that πέδω is the general, χώρα the precise term. Comp. v. 753.

458, 459. These two lines have been much handled by the critics. The only real difficulty lies in the fact that μένειν applies to the Furies, πέμπειν to Pallas; but this is quite compatible with the abrupt changes of construction introduced by Æschylus without rupture. Translate, "Such are the two alternatives: to let them remain, or dismiss them—both inextricably distressing to me." Literally, "that they should remain, or that I should dismiss them." The position of ἐμοί is emphatic, "seen to me."

461. ὀρκίους αἰρουμένη, Schol. ἐνὸρκους

δικαστὰς. Paley reads ὀρκίους αἰρουμένους, governed by θήσω; but it may be questioned whether this can mean "jurejurando obstrictos," as he interprets.

462. θεσμὸν τὸν—θήσω, "I will establish this as a θεσμός," Muller. But τὸν refers rather to the words that follow it, "The institution that I will found shall endure for ever."

463. μαρτύριά τε καὶ, the rhythm of this line is aided by the accent on the last syllable of μαρτύριά.

465. τὰ βέλτατα = "prima virorum."

466. διαιρεῖν = ὥστε αὐτοὺς (τοὺς ἀστούς) διαιρεῖν.

467. πορόντας, Herin. for περῶντας, from the Schol. ὄρκον διδόντας.—φράσειν for φρεσίην, Markland. Exit Pallas here.

468. καταστροφὰὶ νέων θεσμίῶν, "revolutions resulting in new laws;" = καταστ. θεσμ. ὥστε νέους εἶναι. Comp. Prom. V. 317.

469. εἰ κρατήσῃ—μητροκτότου, "if

τοῦδε μητροκτόνου. 470

this matricide's definition of justice and injury (right and wrong) is to prevail." Δίκαι καὶ βλάβαι might possibly mean "the unjust cause," by a kind of hendiadys: δίκαι τε καὶ βλάβαι never.

471. εὐχερεία, "the bold, unhesitating commission of crime." It is curious to remark how εὐ in comp. goes in a circle from the sense of good to bad. It is, 1st, = "benè," as εὔνοος; 2dly, = "facile," as εὐμαθής; 3dly, = κούφως, "leviter," (as in Prom. V. 17, the word εὐωριάζω comes from εὐωρος, "taking light heed of," not, as they say, κατ' ἀντίφρασιν); 4thly, = "foolishly," as εὐήθης; 5thly, = "wickedly," as εὐχερής—εἰα.

478. πάντ' ἐφήσω μόρον, "I will permit every kind of murder." Literally, "I will let all murder loose," as Shakspere, Jul. Cæs. iii. 1, "Cry Havock, and let slip the dogs of war."

479. πεύσεται—παρηγορεῖ. This passage is corrupt in the MSS. It seems best to read ἄκεα δ' for ἄκετ' with Schlutz. Translate, "And a man shall hear from different quarters, when proclaiming the misfortunes of others (τῶν πέλας), of his own troubles, that cease only to be succeeded by fresh ones; but the remedies are uncertain, and each one who consoles his fellow, is a sufferer himself."—ὑπόδοσιν, "succession;" ὑποδιδόναι is "succedere," just as ἐπιδιδόναι is "procedere."—μόχθων = τῶν αὐτοῦ μόχθων: we thus get some meaning out of προφωνῶν τὰ τῶν πέλας κακά.

482. τλάμων τις (sub. τλάμονα) παρηγορεῖ. μάταν is probably an interpolation.

487. Ἐρινύων not Ἐρινύων. See Blomf. Gloss. on ἐλινύοντα, Prom. Vinet. 15.

παντὶ μέσῳ τὸ κράτος θεὸς ὥπασεν·

ξύμμετρον δ' ἔπος λέγω, 505

458. ταῦτα. Not, as Scholefi. says, "Hacpropter," but in apposition with οἶκτον = "ad hunc modum." For οἶκτον οἰκτίσαιτο ἂν is as it were one word = οἰκτρῶς ἂν λέγοι ταῦτα.

492. ἔσθ' ὅπου—καθημένον. Read δεῖ μένειν with Dobree, and translate, "There are cases where Fear ought to remain, exercising a wholesome guardianship over the mind by its presence." Order—ἔσθ' ὅπου τὸ δεινὸν δεῖ μένειν, εὖ καὶ φρενῶν ἐπίσκοπον καθημένον. The Scholiast appears to have so read it, οὐ πανταχῇ τὸ δεινὸν ἀπεῖναι φρενῶν δεῖ. The sense of the whole passage is quite clear: "Even good men are the better for a wholesome awe: how much more necessary is it to control the evil!" See Agam. 955 on καθημένον.

496. ἐν φάει καρδίας = in læto corde—"in the gaiety of his heart,"—μηδὲν, scil. δεινόν, comp. 694.

498. ἢ πόλις βροτός τε. This is an unusual construction. Perhaps it was originally εἰς βροτός πόλις θ' ὁμοίως. Evidently when Æsch. says τίς—ἀνατρέφων he is thinking of an individual, πόλις θ' ὁμοίως is an afterthought.

500. ἀνάρχετον, Herm.; ἀναρκτον οὖν, Heath; ἀναρκτον βίον, MSS.

504. Transl. "Extremes he regards with an adverse eye."—ἄλλα, scil. "alia quam τὸ μέσον."—ἄλλα, literally "otherwise," hence "adversely," just as ἐτέρως is often used, and "secius" in Latin.

505. ξύμμετρον, "consentaneum huic sententiæ," Pal.

δυσσεβίας μὲν ὕβρις τέκος

φρενῶν ὁ πᾶσιν φίλος

ἐκαλξίς πλούτου πρὸς κέρρον ἀνδρὶ λακτίσαντι μέγαν Δίκας βωμὸν εἰς ἀφάνειαν.

518. ξενοτίμους δωμάτων, Paley rightly translates, "The hospitable frequentings of his house," i.e. "the hospitality demanded by strangers who frequent his house:" it is merely a periphrasis for ξένους. The hypallage in ξενοτίμους ἐπιστροφὰς is the same as in ματρῶν ἀγνισμα φόνου, sup. v. 304.

520. ἀνάγκας ἄτερ δίκαιος ὢν. Compare the noble sentiment in Philistus apud Grot. Flor. p. 61,

ἀνὴρ δίκαιός ἐστιν οὐχ ὁ μὴ δίκων,
ἀλλ' ὅστις ἀδικεῖν δυνάμενος, μὴ βούλεται.

523, 524. So I read with Hermann, making τὰ πολλὰ παντόφυρτα governed by παραιβάταν. Paley's reading and translation of this passage is improbable.

524. παντόφυρτα, "temere confusa," properly "kneaded all together" (φίρω),
"jumbled promiscuously."—ἄνευ δίκας,
Hor. Od. i. 18, "Quum fas atque nefas exiguò fine libidinum Discernunt."

 εἶτ' οὖν πέλει διατόρος ἢ Τυρσηνικὴ σάλπιγξ, βροτείου πνεύματος πληρουμένη, ὑπέρτονον γήρυμα φαινέτω στρατῷ·

526. πίρος, an appropriate word in speaking of "shipwreck." So Dem. de Cor. 194, πυρσάντων τῶν σκευῶν ἢ καὶ ξυτρίβέντων ὄλωσ.

527. κεραία, prop. "the yard-arm," "cornua antennarum."

530. γελᾷ ἐπι = ἐπιχαίρει, "exults over."

531. τὸν οὐποτ' ἀχούοντα, not quite rightly translated by Paley, "qui dicere solebat nunquam ita fore," but "qui nunquam expectabat." So the Schol. τὸν μηδέποτε προσδοκῆσαντα. αδχῶ is, 1st, to assert confidently; 2d, to expect confidently (as here and in Prom. V. 710); 3d, "to presume," (Monk on Alcest. 95.) thence "to boast." Comp. Agam. 508.

532. λαπαδνὸν, Herm. = ἀλαπαδνὸν, "weak, helpless." The α makes no change in sense. So we have βληχρός or ἀβληχρός—μέλγω or ἀμέλγω—στάχυς or ἀσταχυς, &c.—ὑπερθέοντ' ἄκραν =

533. Join δι' αἰῶνος ὦλετο.

537. εἶτ' οὖν πέλει. I have ventured to restore πέλει to the text on the authority of one MS. (the Farnesian). Another also has in the margin to this line the words λείπει πέλει. This seems better than any emendation purely conjectural, as Butler's οὐρανοῦ, which is also tame in sense. In most of the MSS. the line runs thus, εἶτ' οὖν, or ἦτ' οὖν διατόρος Τυρσηνικῆ. Transl. "Let the herald convene the people: and if, in pursuance of this (οὖν), the trumpet, when filled with human breath, be distinctly audible, let that deliver a shrill utterance," &c. The σαλπικτής always made his appearance in summoning the extraordinary popular assembly: see De Coron. 169.

542. It is quite clear the two things coupled by τε and καὶ are (1st) the general advantage of the Institutions for all time, and (2d) the particular use to which they are now to be applied; viz. to settle this cause: τῶνδε therefore means Orestes and the Furies, the two contending parties.

543. καταγνωσθῆ, "be decided," prop. "against the defendant." But many legal terms, which were originally limited to one technical meaning, came to be used in an extended signification; so ἀπολογία in Demosth. is often "pleading" simply; σύνδικος (prop. defendant's counsel) comes to be "any advocate." Comp. vv. 549 and 731.

546. δόμων. The repetition of this word may have been caused by the poet's carelessness; but I would prefer reading ἔστι γὰρ μολῶν ἰκέτης, as v. 519, αἰδόμενος ἔστω.

549. αὐτός as "idem" in Latin.

551. ὅπως τ' ἐπίστα, comp. Prom. V. 382. Paley reads this verse ὅπως ἐπίστα τήνδ' ὁ κυρώσον δίκην, "Whosoever intends to sanction this suit," which is very probable: the sense is much the same as Hermann's reading, given above.

555. The Schol. on this verse distinctly states the number of the Chorus to be 15; τοῦτο οὐ πρὸς τὰς τρεῖς, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸν χορὸν· ἰε' γὰρ ἦσαν. (See Introd. § 7.) This overthrows Blomfield's fanciful theory; see on 135.

559. τῶν τριῶν παλαισμάτων. A favourite metaphor with all Greek writers. Comp. τριακτήρ, Agam. 171. The power which the Greeks attached to the third, is observable in the third cup, to Zeus, see v. 730; the third fall in wrestling, in the word τρικυμία ("fluctus decumanus" in Lat.), and many other instances.

560. κειμένῳ, a technical word in wrestling.

565. ἐξηγεῖτο. See Intro. § 36. = "præire verbis," "to dictate," hence to expound, interpret the laws, ceremonies of religion, &c.

568. πέποιθ'. Hermann alters this line to κἄμοιγ' ἀρωγὰς—πέμψει πατήρ, from the Schol. ὡς ὑμῖν (or ὑμᾶς) ἐπέμψεν ἢ μήτηρ, οὕτω βοηθούς κἀμοὶ πέμψει δ πατήρ. How frail a foundation to build a new reading upon!

569. πέπεισθι formed as ἴσθι, κέκλυθι, ἄνωχθι, κέκραχθι. The line is ironical.

570. μισμάτων, not μισμάτων. Elmsl. on Med. 798, shows that the ancient Greek writers and the tragedians, though they use δύο with a pl. subst., never use δυοῖν. In Agam. 1344, read ἐν δυοῖν οὐμαγμάτων. Translate, "Yes, (I slew her) because she laid herself open to attack (προσβολὰς εἶχε) for two several crimes;" or, "Two crimes served as points from whence to assail her."—προσβολή is what Thucydides calls ἐπιτελείχισμα in warfare.

571. Observe the irony of δῆ, implying disbelief.

572. ἀνδροκτονοῦσα may mean simply, "She committed homicide—and in so doing slew my father:" or, as Herm. and Paley take it, "She slew her husband," &c. Herm. observes, "Non enim solum maritum interfecit, quæ non erat Oresti justa occidendi causa —sed etiam patrem ejus: ob id demum a filio eam puniri æquum erat."

573. "She is freed from blood-guiltiness by her death; you live and are not freed;" therefore you must suffer punishment.

583. δοκεῖ, supple, πεπράχθαι from δρᾶσαι in v. 581, Pal.

588. κελεύσαι, Herm. for κελεύσει.

589, seqq. Translate, "I bid you observe the full force of this just argument, and follow up the will of Zeus: for even an oath is of less authority than Zeus." The argument is = μὴ θεομαχεῖτε, "Do not let any scruples about the oath you have just taken, induce you to give a verdict contrary to his revealed will, which is of sufficient authority to cancel your oath;"—v. 591 should perhaps be translated, "As an object of faith (a thing to swear by) nothing is more sovereign than Zeus." The sense is much the same.—ἔμμε for ὑμᾶς: so Antig. 846.

595. οὐ γάρ τι ταυτὸν—θανεῖν. The apod. to this is omitted, because it is obvious. Transl. "Aye, for there is no identity in the two cases."

597. καὶ ταῦτα, "idque," Lat.

"having made a tolerable bargain of it," i.e. with results good rather than bad. The same metaphor is in Theb. 540, καπηλεύειν μάχην.

603—605. The construction is rightly given by Paley. φᾶρος παρεσκήνωσε δροίτη περῶντι αἰτῷ λουτρὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τέρματι. Transl. "But as he was bathing, she threw a robe over the tub, extending to the very extremity of the bath (scil. τῶν λουτρῶν), and smote her husband, when she had fettered him with embroidered drapery from which he could not escape."—παρεσκήνωσε, lit. "drew as a curtain over."—περῶντι λουτρὰ, simply "bathing," not "passing through the bath-room," for so Clytemnestra could not have taken him at advantage.—ἀτέρμονι, lit. "of which he could not find the end."

635. This οὐδέ is difficult to explain. Paley makes out the sense thus, "Hera is Zeus' daughter—not only not begotten by a mother (in the sense in which the male is said to beget), but not even nurtured in the womb, as all other creatures are." Herm. supposes a line omitted before v. 635. We might read οὐκ with Schutz, or understand οὐδέ in the sense of "not at all," as Thueyd. iv. 84, ἦν δὲ (ὁ Βρασιδᾶς) οὐδὲ δδύνατος, ὡς Λακεδαιμόνιος, εἰπεῖν.—"he was by no means wanting in eloquence for a Lacedæmonian."

648, 649. The Chorus will as yet accept of no half-terms from Pallas. Instead of noticing her deprecatory remark, they turn to the Jury with confidence.

650. Join ἐν καρδίᾳ αἰδεῖσθε.

655. πάγον τόνδε. Pallas here points to the stage-picture, or περίακτος, on which the Areopagus was delineated. (Introd. § 14.)

Id. Ἄρειον. Dind. and Herm. read ἔρειον. The construction is somewhat confused here. The common way of explaining this passage is to make πάγον τόνδε an accusativus pendens, as if Æsch. intended to have added a verb to govern it at the end of the sentence, such as σχῆσειν βούλομαι τὸ μὴ ἀδικεῖν.

But Paley rightly observes that ὅτ' ἦλθον—καὶ ἀντεπύργωσαν τότε would be very harsh. His interpretation is far better: πάγον δ' Ἄρειον τόνδε καὶ πόλιν νεόπτολιν τῆνδε (= ἀκρόπολιν) τότε ἀντεπύργω. Ἀμαζόνες, ὅτ' ἦλθον, &c. 666. Comp. v. 500. τὸ μήτ' ἀναρχον —the accusatives belong partly to περιστέλλουσι, partly to σέβειν, "I recommend the citizens to embrace and respect," &c. Porson reads περιστέλλουσα, "I invest the citizens with," &c.

674. ἀθικτον—active; "never touching bribes."

675. εὐδόντων—ἐγρηγορὸς, "careful in behalf of the careless," or it may be literally, "holding their sittings at night (comp. 662) in behalf of the sleeping citizens," in accordance with the idea that the Areopagites sat by night, so as not to be moved to pity by the sight of the criminal.

678. ὀρθοῦσθαι, simply to arise.

680. αἰδουμένοις. Canter and Herm. for αἰδουμένοις.

697. The old reading δαίμονας was suspicious, from ἀρχαίας θεάς following in the next verse. There is little doubt that Hermann is right in reading διανομὰς from the Schol. on Eur. Alcest. 12, who quotes the lines thus:—Αἰσχύλος Εὐμενίσι :

757. The true reading and punctuation of this and the following lines is not easy to ascertain. I have followed Hermann, except in changing γένωμαί to γελῶμαι. Supply τί το γένωμαί, from τί ρέξω, as in Eurip. Ion, 1446, τίν' αὐδὰν αὖσω, βοάσω; and translate "What am I to do! what is to become of me! My sufferings shall prove disastrous to the citizens." On the last line, the Scholiast says, εἰπὼν γὰρ "δύσοιστα ἔπαθον," ἐπήγαγε πολίταις, ἵνα ἢ πολίταις δύσοιστα ἔντα. The MSS. have ἔπαθον. I cannot believe that δύσοιστα is a nom. fem. as Müller and Paley say.

759. μεγάλα τοι probably carries on the idea in ἔπαθον,—"Much I wot, have the ill-fated daughters of Night suffered." Otherwise we must take μεγάλα adverbially with δυστυχεῖς, which is harsh.

763. ἀληθῶς, "Really equal, though apparently against you:" for the Jury were equally divided: my casting vote made the difference.

765. ὁ χρήσας. Turneb. MSS. ὁ θήσας—Herm. reads ὁ φήσας from the Schol., ἔφασκε γὰρ ὁ Ἀπόλλων γνώμη Διὸς μαρτεῦσθαι. αὐτὸς—αὐτὸς, Æsch. frag. ap. Plat. Remp. II. fin. ὁ δ' αὐτὸς ὑμῶν αὐτὸς ἐν θοίῃ παρὼν Αὐτὸς τὰδ' εἰπὼν αὐτὸς ἐστὶν ὁ κτανὼν τὸν παῖδα τὸν ἐμὸν. Comp. Xen. Anab. III. 2, and Bloisf.

in Linwood's edit. of Æsch.

767. τοι, Herm. for τῆ.

768. σκήψητε, Elms. on Med. 93 for σκήψησθε. Observe the change of tense in σκήψητε—θυμοῦσθε. The aorist expresses an action done suddenly, and at once accomplished: the present, its continuance;—"Visit not this land with the lightning of your heavy resentment—do not continue in anger." Herm. thinks from μὴ θυμοῦσθε to τεύξητ' an interpolation.

769. δαιμόνων is unintelligible. Musg. reads πνευμόνων, which makes the sense clear. Herm. δαίων σταλαγμάτων.—αἰχμὸς as Agam. 467, "influence."

773. λιπαροθρόνοισιν ἐσχάραις, "altars that make shining thrones for you."

789. θεαὶ βροτῶν, antithetical.—“Goddesses in a quarrel with mortals,”—a quarrel unworthy of you.—στήσητε, simply “make,” as Soph. Œd. Col. 1041, πρὶν ἂν σε τῶν σῶν κύριον στήσω τέκνων,
and καταστήσω, Antig. 657.—δύσκηλον, “sterile,” lit. “difficult to be charmed,” comp. ἀνήμερον χθόνα, v. 14.

791. δωμάτων—ἐν φ. Herm. would read δάματος. Schutz ἐν οἷς. Needless: for the construction (generally termed πρὸς τὸ νοούμενον) is a common one.— ἐν φ = οἷ.

793. οὐδὲν δεῖ. Because I hope to effect my object by persuasion, so that an appeal to force will be unnecessary.

[καίτοι σὺ μὲν κάρτ' εἶ γ' ἐμοῦ σοφωτέρα,]

799. πρὸ here = ὑπὲρ, as Agam. 980, τὰ μὲν πρὸ κτησίων κτημάτων = "pars pro reliquis meribus." In such expressions as μάχεσθαι πρὸ παίδων—ἀλέσθαι πρὸ πόλης, the sense of ὑπὲρ may easily be connected with the usual local sense of πρὸ—"to fight standing in front of."

802. κατὰ γᾶν, "in terrâ," Pal. But it is very questionable whether κατὰ γᾶν could be thus used with a verb so decidedly expressive of rest as οἰκεῖν, and Hermann's correction of οἰχεῖν should not be overlooked: κατὰ γᾶς would destroy the whole force of the passage; as the Furies complain that they will be obliged to dwell on earth by the proposal of Pallas.

806. "Versus pherecrateus, sequente clausulâ choriambicâ, et duo ultimi dochmiaci sunt," Paley. Hermann alters the metrical arrangement of these lines, dividing them between eight different choreutæ.

808. δαναίᾳν. The MSS. read this word in various ways; δαμαίων—δαμαίαν—δαμίαν—Turneb. conjectured δαμίαν, which the Scholiast evidently read (δαμίαν' τὴν δημοσίαν). Herm. reads τιμᾶν ἀμᾶν, as 226, τιμὰς σὺ μὴ σύντεμνε τὰς ἐμὰς λόγῳ. But Dindorf's correction, δαναίᾳν θεῶν, seems preferable; as γέρας παλαιῶν in v. 386.

809. Join δόλοι θεῶν, and translate, "Irresistible treachery on the part of Gods, hath reduced me from my ancient privileges to a mere cipher." So παρ' οὐδὲν εἰργάσω, 204; παρ' οὐδὲν ἔθεντο, Agam. 221.

811. This line is an interpolation;

ὑμεῖς δ' ἐς ἀλλόφυλον ἐλθοῦσαι χθόνα γῆς τῆσδ' ἐρασθήσεσθε· προὔννεπώ τάδε.
 οὐπιρρέων γὰρ τιμιώτερος χρόνος 815

 μήθ' αἱματηρὰς θηγάνας, σπλάγχχνων βλάβας νέων, αἰνοῖσις ἐμμανεῖς θυμώμασι· μηδ', ἐξελοῦσ' ὡς καρδίαν ἀλεκτόρων, ἐν τοῖς ἐμοῖσι ἀστοῖσιν ἰδρύσης, Ἄρην ἐμφύλιόν τε καὶ πρὸς ἀλλήλους θρασύν. 825 θυραῖος ἔστω πόλεμος, οὐ μόλις παρών, for καίτοι γε cannot be joined, and κάρτα σοφωτέρα is scarcely Greek. Paley also suspects v. 812.

814. ἐρασθήσεσθε here = ποθήσετε, "desiderabitis."

815. οὐπιρρέων—ἔσται. "The influx of time shall increase the glory of these citizens."

817. πρὸς δόμοις Ἐρεχθέως. See Introd. § 45.

819. Paley reads ὄσων for ὄσων—Ahrens ὄσ' ἂν—Herin. and Linw. think that a verse has been lost after 818;—ὄσαν (agreeing with ἔδραν) might be read.

821, 822. Translate, "Do not cast upon my land the whetstones of bloodshed, (i. e. do not introduce quarrels that exasperate men to bloodshed,) the bane of youthful spirits, maddened with a fury not caused by wine." Ἐμμανεῖς, accus. pl. in appos. with βλάβας and θηγάνας, and referring by hypallage to νέων σπλάγχχνων. Paley is wrong in saying "αἰνοῖσις, quia vinum Furiis non offerebatur."—ξοῖνα θυμώματα = "rage more deep and lasting than that produced by intoxication."

823. ἐξελοῦσα. All the MSS. have this participle. Paley is right in retaining it, and placing a comma after ἰδρύσης—he says, "Non potuit ἰδρῶσαι ἐν τοῖς ἀστοῖς, nisi ex avibus prius exsecuisset," but the expression is of course entirely metaphorical, as the words ὡς καρδίαν denote.

826. οὐ μόλις παρών. I cannot understand why Müller and Hermann should read ἢ μόλις παρών. The sense is clear; "Let foreign war be found without difficulty to appease the thirst of glory in my citizens; but I forbid all domestic broils." Æschylus does not mean to reprobate war with foreign nations. So Paley wrongly interprets, "Veniat bellum abundè—sed non veniat nobis."—ἐν φῶ = ἐκεῖνον ἐν φῶ, "for that man in whom," &c.

ἐν ᾧ τις ἔσται δεινὸς εὐκλείας ἔρωσ· γλώσσης ἐμῆς μείλιγμα καὶ θελκτήριον, σὺ δ' οὖν μένοις ἄν· εἰ δὲ μὴ θέλεις μένειν,

828. ἐνοικίου ὄρνιθος, as Pind. Ol. xii. 20, ἐνδομάχας ἀλέκτωρ. There is an opposition between ἐνοικίου and θυραῖος, v. 826.—οὐ λέγω = "dictam nolo," "I suppress as ill-omened." So Ag. 838, τὴν κάτω γὰρ οὐ λέγω, and Soph. Elect. 1446, εἰ δ' ἔπεισι νέμεσις, οὐ λέγω.

845, 846. The construction of these two lines is less clear than the sense, which, as the Schol. says, is εἰ πείθει τῷ μείλιγματι τῆς ἐμῆς γλώσσης. The words γλώσσης ἐμῆς μείλ. serve to limit the more general expression σέβας πειθοῦς to this particular case. Join ἀγνόν καὶ θελκτήριον, and transl. "However, if the rights of Persuasion, (as exemplified in) the honeyed accents of my tongue, are in your opinion holy and propitiatory—in that case you will remain."—Πειθοῦς personified. Comp. 928.

848. οὐτὰν for οὔτοι ἄν.—ἐπιρρέποις, "cause to befall," or "wreak against," Agam. 242, Δίκη τοῖς μὲν παθοῦσι μαθεῖν ἐπιρρέπει τὸ μέλλον ("awards.") It is more usual in an intransitive sense.

849. στρατῶ is not a pleonasm. "Wrath or resentment on the city generally: mischief, (the result of your wrath,) on the people."

850. γαμόρω, Dobree's almost certain correction for γ' εὐμόρου, = γεωμόρω, "incolæ."

854. καὶ δὴ δέδεγμαί, "fac autem me accepisse," "suppose it accepted." See Elmsl. on Med. 380, Herm. on Vig. § 331. "Finge datos currus; quid agas?" &c. says Apollo to Phaëthon, when arguing against his rash purpose, Ov. Metam. li. 74.

859. ἔξεστι—τελῶ. Paley rightly interprets this verse, "Aye; for I need not promise what I shall not perform;" i.e. the best pledge of the sincerity of my promise is, that if I choose, I need make no promise at all; it is purely voluntary. He quotes Demosth. Mid. p. 538, ἐλθὼν ἐπὶ δεῖπνον οἱ μὴ βαδίζειν ἐξῆν αὐτῶ, ("whither he need not have gone"). Plat. Gorg. p. 461.

862. τί οὖν. τί μ' οὖν, Blomf.—Pors. on Phœniss. 892 denies the possibility of this hiatus. Blomfield corrects numerous instances of it on Sept. c. Theb. 190, which see.

863. ὅποια—ἐπίσκοπα. Paley makes νίκη κακή a euphemism for "defeat." and refers to Sept. c. Theb. 713. But that passage is very ambiguous; Æsch.

would scarcely have used such a phrase to signify "defeat."—Nor is Hermann's reading, νείκης, more probable: he translates "opta quæ bonæ contentionis non male (qualis antea tua fuerit rixa) provida sint." But the Furies have only just begun to be softened; it is not yet the time for Pallas to talk of their "rivalry in blessing," which she does in the noble expression (931) νικᾷ δ' ἀγαθῶν ἔρις ἡμετέρα διὰ παντός.—The truth is, Pallas here refers to what she had said in v. 825, seq. "Ἄρην ἐμφύλιον—ἐνοικίον ἔριθος μάχην, &c. Translate, "Whatever tends towards victory without dishonour," such as civil war would produce; "unalloyed victory," over foreign enemies only.

868. κάμνειν, "fail," properly "tire."

870. ἐκφορωτέρα. Either a word technically used in gardening, "may you weed out," or metaph. "may you carry out as to burial." The sense is in either case, "Be an exterminator (rather than otherwise) of the wicked." The comparative is scarcely different from a positive, as ἄμεινον, v. 602.—ἀγροκότερος, Arist. Acharn. &c.

872. τῶνδε governed by ἀπένθητον, and agreeing with τῶν δυσσεβούντων understood.

875. Constr. οὐκ ἀνέξομαι τὸ μὴ οὐ (οὐτω) τιμᾶν τὴν πόλιν, (ὥστε εἶναι αὐτὴν) ἀστύνικον. Compare such phrases as αἰζεσθαι μέγας. The allusion is to friendly contests, national games, and the like.

879. καὶ Ζεὺς—"even Zeus."

880. ἄγαλμα, "the darling," or "the ornament," as Agam. ἀκασκαῖον ἀγαλμα πλούτου.

885. ἔξαμβρύσαι. (Herm. after Pauw,) aor. fr. ἔξαναβρύω, in a transitive sense, "may cause to abound." But there is no other instance of βρύω being used in first aorist ἔβρυσα. Scholef. formerly conjectured ἔξαμβρύσαι from ἔξαναβράσσω, "cause to boil or bubble forth," quoting Herod. vii. 188, 190; which Paley approves. But the use of this aorist ἔβρυσα is also doubtful: nor is the Antist. 907 any guide to us as to quantity.

889. αὐτοῦ κατανασσαμένη, "having caused to settle here;" see Elmsl. on Med. 163.

892. ὁ δὲ μὴ κύρσας. This passage is difficult. Herm. reads ὁ δὲ μὴ κύρσας βαρέων τέκτων, but this can scarcely mean, "he that hath done no evil," which I suppose he intends. Read ὅ γε μὴν with Linwood, and transl. "He that hath experienced misfortunes knoweth not from what quarter the strokes of life have smitten him;" because it is not for his own offences, but for those of his fathers, that he is brought before the Furies.—βαρέων τούτων, scil. τῶν κατ' ἀνθρώπους, in v. 890.

893. προσέπεισαν is supplied by Hermann to fill up the hiatus.—He compares πρόσπαια κακά, Agam. 332 and Pron. V. 887.

895. ἀπάγει, "hales," a technical word, usually applied to "leading away" the criminal for execution.—μέγα φωνοῦντ', "boasting, priding himself," that he had done nothing to bring on him the Furies' anger—or that he had never suffered before. σιγῶν ὄλεθρος, "a silent doom;" i.e. a doom of which the cause is hidden and unexplained—or as Tibull. i. 9, 4, "Sera tamen tacitis Pœna venit pedibus."

898, sqq. Herm. quotes Herod. iii. 65, Æschin. in Ctesiph. § iii. p. 502.

899. τὰν ἐμὰν χάριν λέγω, "I am now speaking of my own good offices,"—since Pallas has already spoken of hers. φλογμός—τόπων. "Nor drought that withers the buds of plants, so that they cannot shoot beyond their bounds."—φλογμός = "uredo." So Virg. Georg. ii. 73, "Nec modus inserere, atque oculos imponere simplex;" and so in the older English poets the "eyes" of plants are constantly spoken of. Shaksp. Cymbeline, ii. 3 :

"And winking marybuds begin
To ope their golden eyes."

905. ξὺν διπλοῖσιν ἐμβρύοις. Theocritus (i. 25,) would say διδυμάτοκα, "twin-bearing."

906. γόνος δ' αἰε, Dobree, Herm. γόνος δὲ πᾶς, Müller.

907. ἐρμαίαν—τίοι = τίοι δαίμονας δίδοντας ἔρμαια.—τίοι, scil. ταῖς ἀπαρχαῖς: "May the whole race, enriched by the produce of the Earth, honour by first-fruits the Gods who give them such unexpected blessings."—Herm. understands "metalla" by πλουτόχθων, but this is far-fetched.—ἐρμαίαν. The penult. of this word being common, gives us no help in determining the quantity of ἐξαμβρύοις, or whatever the corresponding word may be, in the Strophe, v. 885.

909. φρούριον, what Aristoph. would call λέως ὁ σωσίπολις, Acharn. 162.

910. μέγα γὰρ δύνатаι. The force of γὰρ is "Nor need you doubt the performance of these promised blessings; for mighty," &c.

Paley compares Od. xi. 79, "ὡς ἔμ' αἰστώσειαν Ὀλύμπια δώματ' ἔχοντες." So Agam. 561, τιθέντες δρόσοι.

920. Θεαί τ', ὦ Μοῖραι, Herm.—μητροκασιγνήται. The Fates were also Night's daughters.—ὀρθονόμοι, "justa distribuentes," from νέμω. ὀρθονόμοι

 μέγα κέρδος ὀρῶ τοῖσδε πολίταις· 945 τάσδε γὰρ εὐφρονας εὐφρονες αἰεὶ μέγα τιμῶντες, καὶ γῆν καὶ πόλιν ὀρθοδίκαιον,

936. δι' ὄργαν, "In greedy wrath exact from the State retribution, to wit, the curse of mutual slaughter."

937. ἀρπαλίσαι, opt., governs πόλεως—πεινὰς, accus. pl. in appos. with ἀντιφ. ἄτας : though Herm. reads πεινᾶς, as the gen. after δι' ὄργαν.

939. χάσματα here = χάριτας, see New Cratyl. p. 372. "May the people shew their gratitude by unanimity in their loves and hatreds."—κοινοφιλεῖ, Herm. for κοινωφελεῖ, an excellent emendation, which points the antithesis to στυγεῖν.—ἀντιδιδοῖεν, scil. οἱ πολῖται.

941. στυγεῖν. Paley says that this depends on ἀντιδιδοῖεν, and = καὶ ἐν νῶ ἔχοιεν στυγεῖν, the second verb being omitted by the fig. Zeugma. Or we may supply τῷ στυγεῖν.—τῶδε scil. ἡ ὁμόνοια.

943. Thus, as Paley informs us, the Medicean MS. reads, "And can it be that thou, restored to thy senses, art discovering the way to speak blessings?" The old reading, φρονούσι—εὐρίσκειν will be—"Are they then so sensible as to discover," &c.—the same sense. Herm.'s mode of punctuation is improbable, and makes the passage very obscure.

943. καὶ γῆν—διάγοντες. "You shall be all-together renowned for keeping your city and country in the straight path of justice." Herm. and Linw. read καὶ γῆ καὶ πόλις ὀρθοδίκαιοι. διάγοντες governs γῆν καὶ πόλιν, as in Isoc. p. 35, διάγειν πόλεις ἐν ὁμονοίᾳ. Comp. Demosth. p. 255. It is more generally absolute, = διάγοντες βίον. But Paley may be right in saying "accusativus πρέψετε πάντως διάγοντες.

γῆν pendet a participio τιμῶντες, vel a simili subauditō, quali φυλάσσοντες.— πάντως Bothe, for πάντες, which is tame: the Venet. MS. has πάντως.

949. αἰσιμίαις, "blessings," for αἰσιμα = ἀγαθὰ, (Etym. Mag.)

950. ἴκταρ—Διὸς, Herm. "Intelligenda sunt hæc verba de præstantiâ et virtute." Plato, in Philebo, p. 16. οἱ παλαιοὶ κρείττονες ἡμῶν καὶ ἐγγυτέρω θεῶν οἰκοῦντες: and Æsch. fragm. Niob. οἱ θεῶν ἀγχισποροὶ, οἱ Ζηνὸς ἐγγύς.

951. σωφρονοῦντες ἐν χρόνῳ = "ever-prudent;" Herm. reads παρθένου φίλας φίλοις εὐφρονοῦντες ἐν χρόνῳ, alluding to v. 946, εὐφρονες αἰεὶ, &c. "You that are at length (ἐν χρόνῳ) kindly disposed towards us, the friends of your friendly Goddess." It must be confessed that this is probable.

952. ὑπὸ πτεροῖς. This was actually the case, for the Theatre was built immediately under the Acropolis, where was Pallas' statue.

957. προτέραν στείχειν, "to lead the way." Herm. thinks that it means "I must first go," and not "I must go first." He says, "Non præit in pompâ Minerva, ut Müllero visum est, sed abit de scenâ ante poimnam." But if this were the case, why should Pallas say χρῆ στείχειν ἀποδείξουσιν θαλάμους? To whom was she to shew their chambers, if not to the Furies?

960. ὑπὸ, "under the propitiating influence."

962. κατέχειν, "Remember, be careful, to avert."

965. Κραναοῦ. See Mitchell on Arist. Acharn. 75, ὃ Κραναὸν πόλις.

ΠΡΟΠΙΟΜΠΟΙ.

βατε δόμῳ, μεγάλοι φιλότιμοι στρ. α'.

973. οὔτι—βίου. Rightly translated by Paley, "Ye shall have no cause to be dissatisfied with the circumstances of life."

977. εἰς τοὺς ἔνερθε—τόπους. The cave at Colonus, which was called χάλκεος οἶδος, was supposed to lead to the infernal regions.

979. δικαίως, "duly."

981. Between this and the following line Herm. thinks that several verses have been lost, in which Pallas changes the name of the Furies from Ἐρίνυες to Εὐμενίδες. This he gathers from Harpocrat. in v. Εὐμεν., and from the author of the argument to this play. It is however by no means certain; nor was it necessary for Æsch. to mention the name Εὐμενίδες. See Introd. §§ 43, 44.

982. Paley says "Vertendum, iis quæ tinctas rubro colore vestes induta sunt, ut prior datus pendent a στόλος et λόχος, 'comitatus iis,'" &c. This seems harsh. I would either read φοινικόβαπτος with Turneb., or ἐνδυτῶν, agreeing with πρεσβυτίδων.—Ἐνδυτὸς, not simply "clad," but "adorned." Eur. Iph. Aul. 1079, Ion, 231.

986. Herm. was the first who saw that this song ought to be divided into Stroph. and Antistr. It is one of those irregular Anapaestic systems, which, as he describes (De Metris, § 374), do not conform themselves to the strict rules of Cæsura, Synaphea, v. Parœmiacus,

&c.—βᾶτε δόμῳ, Herm. Müll. Well. for the MSS. βᾶτ' ἐν δόμῳ. βᾶτε δ' ὄμως, Paley. Qu. βᾶτε δόμον?

987. I do not hesitate to omit ἀπαιδες as an interpolation here. It not only breaks up the metre, but cannot be satisfactorily explained. For ἀπαιδες παῖδες cannot mean "Virgins," nor = "grandæonæ," as Herm. says. It could only have a similar sense to πόλις ἄπολις, πατήρ ἀπάτωρ, &c.—Εὐφροῦνι Dind. for εὐθύφροῦνι. πομπᾶ—εὐφραμεῖτε.—For the hiatus see Herm. de Metris, § 364.

988. χωρῖται, Herm. for χωρεῖτε.

989. ὠγγυγίοισι, "tenebricosis," Pal.

990. If ἀπαιδες in the Strophe is an interpolation, much more are the words τῦχα τε here after περίσσεπται, for they are utterly unintelligible, and clearly inserted by some copyist who found ἀπαιδες erroneously written in v. 987, and wished to make the metre correspond.

992. ἴλαοι, "Mensura vocis Ἰλαῶς auctoritatem habet in Homericis Ἰλαμαί et Ἰλάσκομαι. Ubicunque longa est prior syllaba, id fit per duplicationem literæ λ," Pal. The MSS. read this verse ἴλαοι δὲ καὶ εὐθύφρονες γᾶ.

993. [σὺν] πυριδάπτω, Herm. for the metre's sake—or we might insert the article. The verse is a paræmiac in the MSS., which seem faulty throughout this Chorus.

995. ἐπὶ μολπαῖς, "icilicet songs," New Cratyl. p. 226.

996. The MSS. have σπονδαὶ δ' ἐς τὸ πᾶν ἐνδᾶδες οἴκων, of which no good interpretation can be given. I adopt Linwood's excellent emendation.

998. συγκατέβα, "descended as an auxiliary," properly "into the arena." Choep. 446. 714.
